Friendly Iran Still Mystery To Americans

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — President Eisenhower's visit Monday to Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi will reflect a century of unbroken and friendly diplomatic relations between Iran and the United States.

Iran, or Persia, was among America's first friends in this area and has remained firmly so.

For the average American, however, it has also remained one of the least known countries.

At Tabriz, in Iran's far northwest corner, Iranians are building a monument to an American teacher named Howard Baskerville. He fought for the establishment of the Iranian constitutional monarchy in a civil war half a century ago. The monument marks the spot where Baskerville died — in a conflict which few Americans ever heard of.

Iranians have been interested in America for decades. Americans tended to ignore or forget Iran except in times of sudden crisis.

The President's visit may serve to remind Iranians that this attitude has changed.

Americans came into Iran in a big way during World War II when the Persian Gulf Command helped funnel arms to the Soviet Union over a tortuous 1,800-mile railroad route.

Today thousands of Americans are working in Iran on various development projects, helping train the army or here in private business.

For years British influence was dominant. Now Americans are stronger although they have refrained from political pressures on Iranian governments. In fact some Iranians criticize the United States for this, saying "you're too democratic."

American help was the key factor in getting Iran's vast petroleum fields back into operation after Mohammed Mossadegh nationalized British-owned properties in the early 50s, bringing the Abadan refinery to a shutdown.

The oil industry remained national property while an American-engineered consortium took over actual operation under a settlement negotiated by the Americans.

This agreement guaranteed the Iranian government half the oil earnings. Iran's share now stands at roughly 240 million dollars annually with production and income increasing.

This is a great boon to a nation of 20 million people — many of them with a desperately low standard of living.

Instructor Gives Talk

WEED — Augusto Breschi, instructor of business administration at College of the Siskiyous, delivered an address entitled "Opportunities in Business" before members of the Yreka PTA recently at its meeting in the new Yreka High School building.

Breschi joined Zane Fleischman and Robert Berg, both instructors at Yreka High, at the invitation of the Yreka PTA in a discussion of desirable and necessary training for students intending to enter business professions.

Breschi described the business curriculum at College of the Siskiyous as it now exists and as it will be expanded next year when the college offers a full two-year course.

Breschi discussed the various business fields college graduates might enter and emphasized the desirability of a student's selecting an area of specialization as early as possible in his educational career.

He concluded by describing the progress of a typical student through his college education and toward success in the modern business world.

AF Edge Of Space Jumper Says Leap 'Not Daring'

ALAMOGORDO, N. M. (UPI) — Air Force Capt. Joseph W. Kittinger Jr., who made his second parachute jump from the edge of space Friday nonchalantly described his 14-mile descent as "not a particularly daring thing to do."

"On the first jump everything went wrong," the 31-year-old space jumper said, "but this time everything went right. This was a delightful experience compared to the last one."

Kittinger leaped from an open balloons gondola 74,700 feet above White Sands missile range near here. Holloman AFB officials said the jump "went like clockwork," and Kittinger was described in excellent condition after the near record leap.

Bridge Fans Hold Tourney

The largest tournament to date held by the Lakeshore Duplicate Bridge Club was Thursday night with 14 tables in play in two sections, according to Mrs. David A. Richardson, director.

Eight full master points were issued to winners.

Conservation Need Cited

PORTLAND (AP) — The need for conservation is more than double in the face of high farm production and research should be accelerated, two speakers told delegates here Thursday at a regional National Assn. of Soil Conservation Districts meeting.

Ervin L. Peterson, now assistant secretary of agriculture and former director of the Oregon Department of Agriculture, said soil and water conservation must be accelerated even with surpluses now.

If current production scales are to be maintained in the face of rising population this nation between 1975 and 2000 will have to decide whether to convert timber lands to agriculture.

Earlier J. Gilbert Cox, in the keynote address, said the need for conservation is greater than ever. He declared: "The manner in which we use these raw materials will always have a profound influence on production." Cox, a vice president of the national association, told the nearly 400 delegates: "We know that conservation has helped many farmers increase their yields per acre, and thereby has contributed to our total heavy production of certain crops such as corn and wheat."

'Coffee Break' Planned By SA

The Salvation Army young people are sponsoring a "Coffee Break" on Tuesday, December 15, from 10 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. in the Salvation Army Hall at 400 Klamath Avenue. There will be homemade pies and coffee. All proceeds are for the Hospital Survey Fund.

This is one of the projects for the Young People's Department of the Salvation Army in which they can learn to participate in community service. The Young People's Legion meets every Tuesday evening and the Junior Legion meets every Friday evening at the Salvation Army Hall.

The public is invited to come to the "Coffee Break" and help the young people in this worthy project.

NEKOOSA, Wis. (UPI) — Francis Elsen, 19, was on his way to the Korbel garage to get the brakes on his truck fixed when the brakes failed and the truck smashed through the garage's plate glass window. The garage charged him $500.

ASKED TO PRONOUNCE WASHINGTON (UPI) — Walter T. Bonney, information chief of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, asked Friday whether to pronounce the name of a rocket vee-ga or vay-ga, replied, "I don't know. I'm not a very good pronouncer." THROWS AWAY MONEY SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Ashton Mallico threw away $14,000 Friday, but lost only $11,270. Held up by three paper bag-hooded gunmen, Magliocco, a restaurant owner, threw the cash for cashing payroll checks into the air. The gunmen scrambled for the loot but finally fled leaving $2,730 in scattered bills.
