Farm Prices Dip, But Oregon Still Above Level

Oregon farm prices averaged slightly lower during November, while national farm prices dropped more sharply, reports Mrs. Elvera Horrell, extension agricultural economist at Oregon State College.

Prices received by the state's farmers for their products slipped one-half of one per cent last month as small rises in prices for farm crops failed to offset sharp drops in prices for livestock and livestock products, Mrs. Horrell found as she studied reports from the U.S. Department of Agriculture. They are still nearly three per cent higher than a year earlier, however.

Beef cattle, calves, hogs, lambs, and wool all brought lower prices to Oregon farmers last month, Mrs. Horrell said. Sheep was the only item in the meat-animal class to show an upturn. As a result, meat-animal prices fell as much as seven per cent during last month and now stand 12 per cent under meat-animal prices in the state a year ago.

Prices paid for farm crops in the state last month continued upward for the second straight month, with increases reported on all crops except feed grains, Mrs. Horrell added. Prices on feed grains dipped as lower barley prices more than offset higher prices paid for corn and oats.

Nationally, farm prices dropped two per cent during November with meat animals, cotton, and oranges carrying most of the responsibility for the drop. Biggest upturns came in milk, potatoes, wheat, turkeys and soybeans, Mrs. Horrell said, but these weren't enough to stem the lower price trend.

As a result, national farm prices now stand seven per cent below a year ago and the lowest since March 1947.

While prices received by the nation's farmers tumbled, prices paid by the farmers crept up another notch—one-third of one per cent. But this was enough to push the government's yardstick for measuring farm costs one per cent about a year ago and within one per cent of the all-time high.

With prices farmers receive down, and prices they pay up, farm - product purchasing power last ground last month, Mrs. Horrell pointed out. The parity ratio—the government's yardstick for measuring the relationship between prices received and prices paid by farmers—dropped to 77 in November, two points below a month earlier and five points below a year ago.

When all accounts are added up this year, USDA economists say national net farm income may fall below last year by as much as 15 per cent.
