Vitamins Used In Retarding Food Spoilage

OREGON STATE COLLEGE, - Vitamins are being put to unique uses in retarding food spoilage in studies at Oregon State College.

In the next two years, OSC scientists will study food preservation properties of vitamin K-5 with a grant of $23,667 from the U.S. Department of Public Health, Education and Welfare.

Previous OSC studies indicate that vitamin K as a food preservative prolongs the shelf life of a variety of foods including cottage cheese, mushroom sauce, crab meat, strawberry jam, frankfurters and cheddar cheese. Depending on the amount added, the vitamin may extend refrigerator shelf life as much as six weeks after contents have been exposed to air, reports Dr. H. Y. Yang, food technologist and project leader.

The K vitamins are found naturally in green leafy vegetables, cheese, liver, egg yolk and tomatoes. They are needed by the body to produce prothrombin, a blood substance, essential in coagulation of the blood to prevent excessive bleeding.

Vitamin K-5 is the only known vitamin that kills organisms in food. Vitamin C, ascorbic acid, prevents color changes but doesn't inhibit organisms.

Addition of K vitamins fits in easily with conventional canning or freezing methods, the food technologist says. Unlike other vitamins, they aren't destroyed when heated. They keep food fresh longer as organisms are destroyed when exposed to air.

Another use Yang sees for vitamin K is in the preservation of "dietetic" or low-calorie sugarless fruits. These are usually packed with little or no sugar, normally a preservative. When opened, they spoil rather quickly at refrigerator temperatures.

matter of FACT

Sung by Teuton poets long before the Angles and Saxons ever thought of crossing the channel to England, Beowulf is the earliest English epic poem. It was not written down until some time during the 10th century. The Anglo-Saxon, or Early English in which it is written, is almost as much like German as it is present-day English. The original manuscript of the poem is preserved in the British Museum, London.
