

Health Board Tells Plan For Control Of Mosquito

Plans for a four-year study of new methods of controlling mosquitoes which live in and around Oregon log ponds were outlined this week by the State Board of Health.

The 16-phase project will explore the feasibility of several control techniques reportedly never before used in Oregon, including one to cover ponds with a thin chemical "invisible shield" to trap hatching insects.

DR. RICHARD H. WILCOX, who will become health officer next week, said recent studies by Colorado State College have shown that mixtures of hexadecanol and octadecanol, normally used to retard evaporation from reservoirs, have ensnared and killed aquatic insects such as mayflies and are considered promising as a mosquito control weapon.

The compounds form a thin film on water surfaces which is immediately replenished, whenever broken, from supplies of the flaked chemicals stored in floating baskets.

The study project will be conducted by state health board staff members and is being financed jointly by the health board and the National Institutes of Health, a branch of the Public Health Service.

Dr. Wilcox said the federal government has already allotted $19,170 for the first year's study and has tentatively promised a like amount for each of the next three years.

STUDY FINDINGS will be distributed to all lumbering communities throughout the nation which use log ponds, he said.

One phase of the project will investigate the possibility that mosquitoes can be controlled by heavily saturating log ponds with fresh wood wastes or other materials.

The connection between pollution and mosquito control was discovered somewhat by accident after insect specialists had noticed that long-term residual type insecticides frequently disappeared overnight after being sprayed on log ponds, apparently being neutralized by some chemical in the logs.

It was then found that some log ponds seemed to attract only those mosquitoes which don't attack humans. This occurred, the health board discovered, whether the ponds had been sprayed or not. Invariably, however, these ponds were or recently had been full of logs, although a pond could be full of logs and still be swarming with millions of viciously-biting mosquitoes.

THE KEY WHICH stimulated additional research was the discovery that only those ponds heavily polluted from fresh logs are free of mosquitoes which attack humans.

Group Heads For Equator

SEATTLE (AP) — Twenty-two men, women and children set out in a 100-foot converted refrigerator ship Friday on the first leg of an adventure they hope will take them to the Galapagos Islands on the Equator.

First stop on the 5,600-mile journey was to be Lopez Island in the San Juan group 50 miles to the north. There, Capt. Don Harrsch said marine equipment belonging to Fletcher Burgan, chief engineer of the vessel Alert, will be loaded.

From there the Alert will sail to Port Angeles to load life boat davits and cradles before turning her bow southward.

About 150 persons were on hand at sailing time to wish the Alert and her passenger-crew 'bon voyage.' By late evening the ship had reached Port Townsend, the Coast Guard said.

The Alert will pick up 13 other adventurers at San Pedro, Calif. Harrsch plans a stopover in Costa Rica, then will proceed to San Cristobal in the Galapagos.

With several hundred eggs to a single laying, he pointed out, an area can swarm with millions of mosquitoes after only a few days of favorable weather.

The Oregon study will be conducted by LaVerne S. Miller, health board mosquito control supervisor, and Robert A. McHugh.

Tutor Crackdown Promised For Holding Back Truth

BERLIN (AP) — West Berlin school officials threatened today to crack down on teachers who refuse to tell their pupils the truth about Hitler and the Nazi era.

School Supt. Carl Heinz Evers said his move was inspired by the recent wave of anti-Jewish acts, most of them carried out by youths who have had their schooling since World War II.

The new move came in the wake of a demonstration by 10,000 Germans against hate-mongers and Nazism.

Evers told newsmen he intends to bring disciplinary action against any teacher who fails to give a correct picture of what the Nazis did. He also promised to prevent former Nazis from getting teaching jobs.

Half the teachers in West Berlin are over 45 and Evers said most of them were members of the Nazi party. Under a West German law, party members who had no serious charge against them are entitled to get back jobs they lost right after World War II.

"This," Evers said, "has brought us teachers we could have done without."

In Friday night's demonstration, the crowd — mainly young people — carried banners reading "Nazis Get Out" and "Against Race Hatred." They marched quietly through the center of West Berlin.

The anti-Nazi demonstration was the first staged in Germany since 1933, when Adolf Hitler rose to power.

The paraders, ignoring freezing weather, poured into Steinplatz Square, site of twin monuments to the victims of Nazism and Stalinism.

Sen. Joachim Lipschitz, head of West Berlin's police, praised them for defending the honor of Germany without.

"Up until now," he said, "the world has had confidence in this youth and it is up to us not to cause this confidence to wobble."

The young people also were commended in a telegram sent by West German Chancellor Konrad Adenauer.

Despite a crackdown on racists, there was no letup in the flare-ups of anti-Semitic incidents that spread through West Germany and other parts of the world following the destruction of a synagogue in Cologne Christmas Eve.

More swastika daubing cropped up in other countries Friday.

In Brooklyn, N.Y., a swastika and the words "Heil Hitler" were scrawled on the front door of the Congregation Beth Israel.

Swastikas were chalked on two doors of St. Luke's Lutheran church in New Rochelle, N.Y.
