A NEW DIMENSION is brought to the pages of the Herald and News through the use of color. Green is more green when you see it as well as read about it. Today's world is more exciting because of color. Two-tone cars drive the highways; pastel mixing bowls brighten the kitchen shelves; even vitamins in bright shades dress up the drug counters and in fashion the story is all color. Lentheric adds a new color ally in fragrance. The girl in green shown here through the courtesy of Lentheric, accents the green of her gown with Lentheric's Adam's Rib in its new mist spray flacon of forest green.

IMPACT OF COLOR

Color is the keynote of today's living and the Herald and News brings you color in numerous ways.

In order to reproduce the picture shown here, the newspaper made separate plates in a process known in the engraving department as color separation work. The page must run through the press once for each color printed in the picture. The color negative was furnished by Lentheric and that company had the photograph made at Murals, Inc., in New York. Furniture is by Bentham, Ltd., and the wallcovering by Mignon on silk by Murals, Inc.

Lentheric chose a green dress for its model. The green of the dramatic late-day dress by Grenelle Roberts looks more green when accented by the fragrance excitement of Adam's Rib in its new Rainbow Mist Spray Flacon of forest green, topped by a gold cap and identified with a gold and green label.

The Lentheric concept—that fragrance adds dimension to color—means that every dress and every accessory takes on new color beauty when fragrance is added.

Lentheric chemists have linked the way we see color with fragrance. Borrowing from a magic illusion of nature, "as the scent of
