A glance at the news:
KU students were issued their identification cards during English classes Tuesday and Wednesday. These I.D. cards bear a photo of the student, grade and signature. Printed in large letters at the top of the cards are the words: Klamath Union High School, 1959-60.

Egads, grades!
Teachers spent the first part of class periods Wednesday recording grades on report cards. They worked last Friday, when students enjoyed a short vacation, to grade exams and to figure out grades for the Wednesday ordeal.

Those students receiving top marks registered for the nine weeks and semester honor rolls in room 321 immediately after school Wednesday.

To be eligible students must have a 1.5 grade average or better.

nuts and fill your stomach and the polio fund at the same time."
The sales were a smash hit Thursday.

During Christmas vacation, the guidance office along the main hall was remodeled to add two new rooms. The office is now equipped with a full-time secretary, Mrs. Eldena Kenyon, whose help was greatly needed according to Paul Angstead, head of guidance.

On Wednesday, January 27, all freshmen and juniors will take the California Achievement test battery. This group of tests will cover the broad subject areas of reading, vocabulary, and reading comprehension, mathematics reasoning and fundamentals, and English and spelling. The program will disrupt the regular class schedule to the extent that all freshmen and juniors will take tests periods one, two, three and four.

TAP, Teen-agers Against Polio, is underway this week and will end next Saturday announces Sharon Vinzco. "Miss Tap." The polio drive is conducted annually by the students.

KU will not compete with Medford this year, as they are operating on a smaller scale. KU will follow their example by limiting competition between classes and the activities they will use to take in money.

The senior project will include sale of balloons, the juniors will sell windows, sophomores will sell Blue Crutches, while the freshmen will sell peanuts.

KU can also claim the Miss March of Dimes to their collection of beauties, as lovely Barbara Olson won the title last week.

Reds Tested New Rocket, But US Says Missed Target

MOSCOW (AP) — The Russians announced today they fired a rocket 7,760 miles into the central Pacific which fell less than 1.4 miles from its calculated target.

The Tass announcement said the point of fall of the rocket "confirmed the high exactitude of the system of rocket control."

It landed at 8:05 p.m. Wednesday, Moscow time 9:05 a.m. (PST) at a point 12,500 kilometers (7,760 miles) from the takeoff spot—not named in the announcement—and traveled at a speed of 26,000 kilometers (16,150 miles), an hour, the announcement said.

WASHINGTON (AP) — American military authorities believe the Soviets have lobbed a test rocket into the central Pacific but missed their target by several hundred miles.

Military men who would not be quoted by name said Wednesday night the rocket apparently was launched in the vicinity of the Caspian Sea, near the Soviet Union's southern boundary with Iran.

The Soviets have lots of room to spare if they want to claim precision for one of their firings. Their intended impact area covers an expanse of the Pacific some 280 miles long and 160 miles wide, about 1,900 miles from Hawaii.

The Defense Department said it was checking on unverified reports that an object which may have been a Soviet missile or nose cone dropped into the Pacific about noon Wednesday, Washington time.

The reports said the object landed in the area reserved by the Soviet Union for a test period beginning last Saturday and extending to Feb. 16.

If the object was a Soviet missile fired from the Caspian Sea area, a launching location mentioned in advance speculation, it would have had to rocket for perhaps 8,000 miles to reach the target area. That would be farther than the 6,300-mile range American Atlas intercontinental missiles tested in the Atlantic. But President Eisenhower has reported the Atlases have been hitting within a two-mile target area after traveling more than 5,000 miles.

American rocket experts are interested in checking on the accuracy of Soviet missiles as they are in checking their range.

Those in the best position to say whether the reported object was a Soviet missile—the Soviets themselves — were keeping mum. They're not in the habit of talking about test firings.

The Pentagon's announcement about the unverified reports was brief. Secretary of Defense Thomas S. Gates Jr. said the reports were being assessed "to determine whether or not this was the nose cone or missile that the Soviets had planned for testing on this range."

Gates said the reported object "had certain characteristics of a ballistic missile."

At Honolulu, headquarters of Adm. Harry D. Felt, commander in chief of U.S. forces in the Pacific, declined to elaborate on the Pentagon announcement.

The Soviets announced two weeks ago they planned to fire into the Pacific impact area during a one-month period beginning Jan. 16. The announced purpose: to test new rocket engines for scientific space research.

There was speculation in Washington that the Soviets wanted to test long range capability and accuracy of their missiles at distances impossible within Soviet territory.

Struck PNW Newspapers To Publish Separately

PORTLAND (AP) — A spokesman for the Oregonian and Oregon Journal Wednesday told an overflow Oregon Ad Club luncheon audience the two newspapers will return to separate publication.

This will be done as soon as the newspapers can do it and still publish good quality newspapers, said Donald S. Haines, assistant to the publisher of the Journal.

Haines said it is impossible to fix a definite date for the separation. The newspapers, struck by the Stereotypers Union Nov. 10, have published jointly since at the Oregonian plant.

Haines and W. R. Morrish, assistant to the publisher of the Oregonian, presented the newspapers' side before the crowd. Some 400 turned out, although a hotel employee said meals had been ordered for about 75.

The Journal official said neither he nor anyone else on the staff of either paper could provide an exact date for the resumption of separate publication. He said the Journal spent $150,000 on new equipment which will permit easier publication when it returns to its own plant.

In answer to a question, Haines said union claims of a circulation loss by the papers are inaccurate. He said "the last time I checked" the loss of subscribers amounted to 14.8 per cent of both papers.

He said the joint circulation was substantially higher than the 273,000 estimated by the unions.

The papers had a combined daily circulation of about 430,000 before the strike.

Morrish, who described events leading up to the strike, said the publishers offered to arbitrate all issues involved in pre-strike negotiations. He denied earlier union accusations that the stereotypers were pushed into a strike.

Stereotypers Union international headquarters refused to permit arbitration and told the local union that it would have international backing for a Nov. 10 strike on existing issues, Morrish said.

Both sides generally agree that those key issues were the number of men required to operate a new plate-casting machine, membership in the union for foremen and payment of substitutes when employees lay off at their own option.

Haines, commenting on union charges that the strike was provoked and premeditated, said all other unions had been asked to come to work despite the strike of stereotypers. He said when members of all but one union refused to cross picket lines it was not until 2 p.m. of that day the newspapers decided on a joint publication. Calls then went out to Haines said all except less than 20 persons now employed are on a permanent basis as replacements for those who struck or had not come to work.

Absent employes in some departments, Haines said, have been replaced completely and the papers will continue to work toward 100 per cent replacement in all departments.

"We are training people," he said, "as rapidly as possible to bring about the optimum balance between men and machines."

CASE NOT CLOSED
WASHINGTON (UPI) — A Justice Department spokesman said Wednesday the lynching of 23-year-old Mack Charles Parker at Poplarville, Miss., is "not a closed case yet." He did not elaborate.

Two grand juries have refused to return indictments in the Negro's lynching, but it is known the FBI drew up a report identifying the alleged lynchers.
