Plans for investment of the club's funds by purchase of coins for resale to the club members were completed at the January 20 meeting of the Klamath Stamp and Coin Club, presided over by President Wally Schreck. Richardson and Melvin Carmichael, was appointed to purchase numismatic items which will in turn be sold to the club members through the club auction.

Officers of the Klamath Stamp and Coin Club are Wally Schreck, president; Roy Rowe, vice president; Leonore Richardson, secretary; and Norma Oliver, treasurer. On the board of directors are Maurice Miller, Cecil Bedford, Thomas E. Richardson, and Al Hoffmeister. Present at the last meeting were 20 members and five visitors, including one from Canada. One of the visitors, presently stationed at Kingsley Air Force Base, had on display a large number of foreign coins acquired while on duty in various places in Europe and Asia.

Special prizes for the meeting were won by Maurice Miller and Mrs. John (Lena) Buckham. An auction of coins was held, with Maurice Miller and Melvin Carmichael doing the auctioneering.

Reviewer Praises Violinist During Recent KF Concert

By JERRY BERCOVITZ

Eric Friedman, a 20-year-old violin prodigy, charmed the near-capacity audience and gave a thrilling concert Thursday in Mills School Auditorium. Friedman appeared as a concert artist under sponsorship of the Community Concert Association.

THE VIOLINIST opened his concert with the "Variation of a Theme" by Correlli. He displayed a flawless technique and fine musicianship for such a young person. Since he stands well over six feet tall, the violin seemed like a toy in the hands of an experienced and competent artist. He showed warm feeling in the Mozart "Rondo in C" and displayed brilliance and understanding in the "Glazou-

nov Violin Concerto."

THE SECOND HALF of his program consisted of shorter works, among them the Heifetz transcription of the "Hora Staccato" which is a short but entertaining Hungarian dance. He concluded with Ravel's "Tzigane," a fiery group of Gypsy melodies calling for the artist to display great warmth of tones and difficult pyrotechnique.

The audience gave the artist such enthusiastic support that he graciously obliged with two very popular familiar numbers for encores, Samuel Gardner's "From the Canebrake," and the ever popular "Flight of the Bumble Bee."

HIS ACCOMPANIST gave him fine support, relinquishing the full spotlight to the soloist.

Eric Friedman, as an introduction, explained why he and his accompanist appeared in dark business suits rather than white ties and tails.

Through a mixup, Jack Maxin's luggage was lost and to prevent embarrassment the artist wore a business suit. At the last moment the lost luggage was found, Maxin had tails and white tie at the school auditorium but Eric Friedman had none. Hence, both wore informal dress.

Slow S-p-peaker Also Too S-slow On The H-handle

MIAMI BEACH (UPI) — Detective Pat Perdue was sitting on a cafe stool having a cup of coffee when he heard a familiar mumble coming from a phone booth.

"Who's that in the phone booth," he asked a waitress.

"Why that's John the Stutterer," she answered.

Perdue hurried back to the station and refreshed his memory in the files:

John Dorfer, 52, alias Mumbles, alias John the Stutterer; four years in federal prison after being convicted with Frank J. Nelson in a $350,000 swindle.

Perdue and three other detectives tracked their man to a hotel Thursday and broke in the door. There stood John the Stutterer and Nelson flushing horse bets down the toilet, the officers reported.

The policemen said they retrieved enough evidence to bring charges of gambling, failure to make criminal registration and vagrancy.
