Work Outlined Of CD Women

The Klamath County Women's Civil Defense Committee can do much to help persons who have been inquiring about how to go about preparing the home for emergencies, county CD Director Joe Searles says.

The organization, headed by Mrs. Natalia Reichenberg, is made up of CD representatives from women's organizations within the county. It meets regularly every second and fourth Tuesday of each month for discussion of individual and family safety during emergency.

Committee delegations from counties throughout the state attend semiannual conferences of Women's Civil Defense Advisory committees in Salem to report on local activities, attend work sessions and gather information on how to serve communities.

Other informational material is available at the county CD office in the county courthouse, Klamath Falls. A combination of home preparedness and widespread acceptance of the home fallout shelter program are aims of every CD organization in the county, Searles says.
