Diana Played Life Role Right Up To The Elbow

By H. D. QUIGG
United Press International

NEW YORK (UPI) — "Of course," said a movie review about the actress in her 20's, "Diana Barrymore played the role to the hilt, and right on past the hilt halfway up to the elbow."

She played life that way, too. It was in Hollywood that her career began to vanish. What she called "the family sickness" of her famed actor forebears was on her. On the lots, it was known she had begun to drink seriously at 20.

The life of the girl who was christened Diana Blanche Barrymore Blythe (the family's name was Blythe, its stage name Barrymore) was a fairy tale in reverse. It started with the dainty foot in the glass slipper and ran backwards to Cinderella scrabbling in rags in the cinders.

She remembered she had her first drink when she was 11. Daddy bought it. Daddy was John Barrymore, the great profile, most famous actor of his day. Paying her one of his extremely rare visits, he picked her up at a Baltimore school, took her to dinner and bought her a brandy alexander. She had two before dinner was over.

A critic once wrote that "Diana Barrymore was born with a silver spoon in her mouth — but she choked on it." She herself titled her autobiography, published in 1957, "Too Much, Too Soon." But the death which she herself had prophesied after she had started drinking again recently came when she knew she had achieved too little, too late.

In the book she wrote that she had lived three lives: "First, that of a child reared by governesses in New York and Paris, who became the 'enfante terrible' of society columnist Cholly Knickerbocker and El Morocco and Princeton weekends, and all the marvelous gold and tinsel of the social register.

"Then, that of a young actress on Broadway and in Hollywood, who tried desperately to live up to a fabulous name in a world bounded by her father's escapades and her own confusion.

"And third, there is the life I have led since — a life which I often think needs the combined talents of a Tennessee Williams and a Dostoevski to explain, and the wisdom and compassion of a St. Augustine to forgive."

New York gossip columnists linked her name romantically with that of playwright Tennessee Williams, but he said they were just good friends. It was in a play of his that she scored a success last spring in Chicago. That was after a long climb back from the depths.

When her third husband, Robert Wilcox, the actor — with whom she brawled so conspicuously that their names were often in headlines — died in 1955, she remembered her doctor's warnings:

"You are on a dreadful merry-go-round — alcohol, barbiturates stimulants. If you don't get off it quickly, you will die. . .your drinking has already given you the beginnings of cirrhosis of the liver . . .you simply cannot continue to torment your body as you have been doing. It took your father 60 years to do it. You keep this up and you'll manage in a much shorter time."

She put herself into Towns Hospital, a dry-out clinic which her father had favored in his time. She shook the alcohol and barbiturates, came out, completed the book with Gerold Frank as collaborator. She worked hard, appeared in summer stock, off-Broadway, and on the road.

Reviews were encouraging but nothing to place her near the eminence of daddy, or aunt Ethel Barrymore, or uncle Lionel Barrymore, or the others, including great-uncle John Drew, and great-grandmother Louisa Lane who was Mrs. John Drew, the elder.

Friends said she stopped drinking perhaps a couple of years but had started again last Christmas "although she knew she would die if she drank." Another friend, Mrs. Irving Kupcinet of Chicago, said that "she had a morbid foreboding all last week, saying, 'I am running out of time' and 'I will die soon.'"

She also said Diana had told her to "get a nice black hat and veil for my funeral — it's going to be soon."

It was reported that four policemen removed Diana from the audience of a Broadway play about 10 days ago when she arrived intoxicated and caused a scene after taking her seat.

She denied that she was intoxicated.

Dr. Colter Rule had been treating her for chest pains. Some friends had dropped in to see her the night before her death. There were three empty liquor bottles in the kitchen and some sedative tablets in a cabinet of her apartment when a maid found her.

On the bed, nude, was the body that had held a soul in anguish. There remained the statistics. Born New York March 5, 1921. Nationality: Irish, English, German descent. Height, five feet four. Eyes brown, hair brown. The autopsy showed no violence.

Apparently, as her lawyer said, "she went to sleep and didn't wake up."

Too much, too soon, or too little, too late.

French Pupils 'Ho-Hum' On Strike

PARIS (AP) — For a time a tiny corner of the Sorbonne was a vest-pocket imitation of the barricaded insurrection in Algiers. But it wilted from hunger and fatigue.

The rightist deputy Jean-Marie le Pen, called Wednesday for a student strike to back up the Algiers insurgents.

The reaction of liberal arts and medical students was a ho-hum.

But law students will be law students. No sooner had Le Pen made his call than 30 budding lawyers—self-styled rightists to a man—headed for the Sorbonne University.

Too late.

The doors to the law school were barred by fire-breathing left-wing scholars.

The rightists retired to the Student Union lounge, locked the door, hurled defiance and prepared to make a stand.

Outside, the youthful leftists set up a patrol.

"We just want to prevent them from preventing us from going to classes," said one.

"If we let them out of there, they'll start picketing and then we'd have to force our way through to class."

Came lunch time.

Five rightists emerged from the room and made a hurried, unmolested exit. The rest stayed put.

At day's end, lack of food and fatigue depleted the ranks of both leftists and rightists.

By 7 p.m. the law school was empty.

Said Dean Gabriel Le Bras in a communique:

"Courses went on as usual Wednesday, Jan. 27."

The ordinary Frenchman has not yet taken to the streets to demonstrate his feelings about Algeria.

Chase Ends; Sibs Killed

CINCINNATI, Ohio (AP) — A routine police chase of a speeder wound up in a blaze of gunfire here late Wednesday night in which two brothers were killed.

They were two of four occupants of the speeding automobile—Charles Brady, 23, and his brother Virgil, 18—both Negroes.

Patrolman Donald Freese was injured seriously when he was attacked and kicked by the men and his partner, Patrolman Harold Williams, suffered body cuts and bruises.

The officers said that when they forced the speeding car to the curb the driver leaped out, knocked Freese down and began kicking him.

Williams radioed for help and then fired twice at one of the men when he came at him with a knife. Patrolman William Kelly arrived on the scene and he said, fired three times and killed the other brother when he saw him attacking Williams from behind.

Legionnaires Hear Solon

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than a billion dollars a year should be spent to keep heavy bombers of the Strategic Air Command in the air on alert around the clock, Sen. Henry M. Jackson (D-Wash) said today.

In an address for the American Legion's National Security Commission, Jackson urged a heavy increase in defense spending.

He said much more money also should be spent for ballistic missiles, Polaris submarines, Army modernization and space research.

His estimate that the SAC alert would cost "not less than one billion for the first year of operation" was much higher than the 90 million dollars asked by President Eisenhower.

"Everybody favors fiscal soundness," Jackson said. "But an arbitrary limit on survival programs is not soundness at all — it is national folly."

Jackson, a member of the Senate Armed Services and Joint Atomic committees, said he would ask funds to begin building 10 more Polaris submarines instead of the three asked by the President.

The nuclear-powered submersibles cost 110 million dollars each.

Jackson also called for:

Quicker modernization of the Army and its increase to 15 full divisions, instead of the 14 now planned. He gave no price tag on this.

Added funds for research, including the space program so that the Soviets will not be "the first to put a man in space."
