State Seeks To Convict Ship's Hand

BOSTON (AP) — The state today pressed for the conviction of a Dutch ship radio operator accused of killing a pretty Chicago divorcee, but it admitted it does not know what weapon, if any, was used.

As the trial of handsome Willem Van Rie, 31, neared the end of the first day Wednesday, his attorneys requested that the prosecution describe the manner of the alleged crime and the weapon.

The state replied: "The commonwealth is unable to specify at this time whether any weapon or other instrument was used in the commission of the crime."

The state contends Van Rie beat pretty Lynn Kauffman, 23, and dumped her body overboard of a shipboard romance during a slow boat trip from the Orient.

Miss Kauffman's body was found on the rocky shore of a drab Boston harbor island in mid-September, the day after the SS Utrecht sailed from Boston to New York on its 44-day voyage from Singapore.

In another specification, the state said Miss Kauffman's body was seen floating in the water before it was recovered from the island's shore.

The state did not disclose who saw the body afloat or whether that person would be called as a witness.

The state chartered a private boat today to take the 12-man jury and its two alternates on a tour of Boston harbor to point out the path of the Utrecht and the spot where the divorcee's body was found.

Van Rie shows no outward signs of nervousness as he sits in the prisoner's dock. Once Wednesday he turned to his wife of two years and winked confidently. She came here from their home in Utrecht, Holland, to stand by him. She occupies a spectator's seat 15 feet from him.

Miss Kauffman was aboard the SS Utrecht with Mrs. Stanley Spector and the three Spector children. She was employed as a research aide to Dr. Spector, professor of oriental studies at Washington University, St. Louis.
