Chances Good In State To Find A Horse To Ride

SACRAMENTO (UPI)—Looking for a horse to ride?

Your chances to find one are fairly good in California, according to a survey of pleasure horses just completed by the California Outdoor Recreation Committee.

The survey, which took about two months to complete, counted 267,326 horses for California's 15 million persons to ride.

It was a tough job.

"We spent about 7,885 man hours counting the horses used for pleasure in California," said Don Lawyer, a state recreation planner.

How was it done?

The committee asked for help from two horsemen organizations: The California State Horsemen's Association and Equestrian Trails, Inc. About 5,000 members of the two organizations participated.

Lawyer was particularly thankful for the help of James Hester, El Monte, who helped get an airplane to count horses in outlying areas of San Bernardino County. He also thanked Tom Johnston, San Francisco; Dr. Donald Casey, Chico; Ivo Vollmer, San Jose; and Sidney Mason, Los Angeles.

The count was made by setting up a small - scale census bureau at Sacramento and organizing county committees of members from the horsemen organizations to make the local counts. Teams of two or three horsemen actually made physical inventories of all pleasure riding horses in their section.

Only the pleasure horses were counted. The committee did not count show horses, racing stock or work horses.

But survey members did count a work horse if he also was used for riding.
