Local Theme Planned For Art Opener

By LOIS TAKACH
Art Instructor
Klamath Union High School

In the first exhibit in the new art gallery, the Klamath Art Association will present a variety of approaches to its theme — paintings and drawings of many of the Klamath Falls industries and business firms which have contributed materials, labor and money to build the new art gallery. The people participating in the exhibit are members of the association. Many are amateur painters who paint chiefly as a recreation. They are the majority of the students who attend the summer art workshops, and many have developed their interest because of the summer workshops. The other artists represented in this group are professional painters, have had extensive study in art, and have had work hung and purchased by museums.

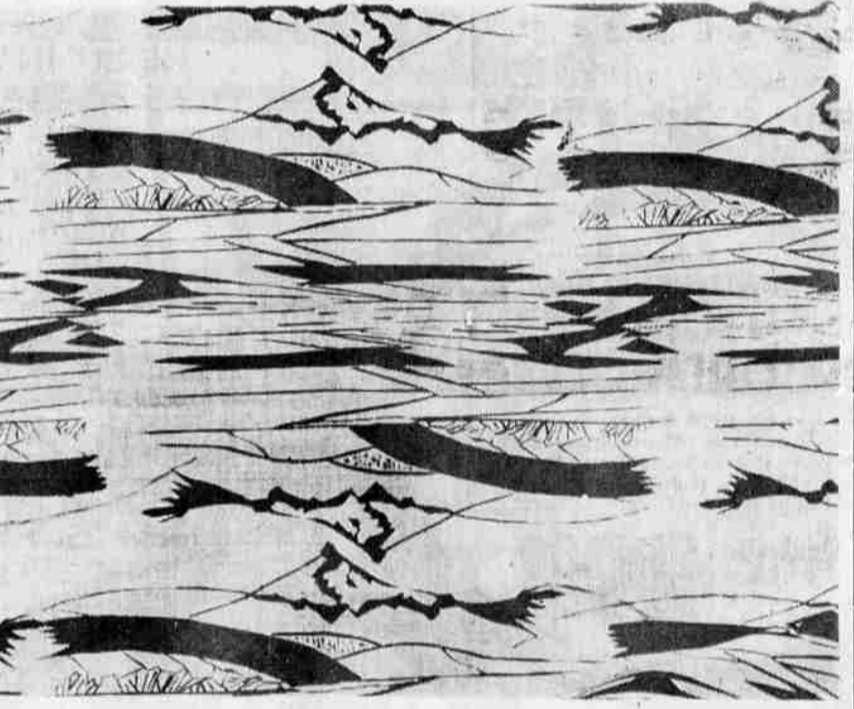

A wide range of media will be displayed — pen and ink drawings and washes, water colors, caseins, oils, pencil sketches, a collage. Because of the variety, some spectators may feel that the display is confusing.

Communication through painting has been largely achieved by the use of recognizable symbols drawn from ordinary visual experience. There are many approaches, for example, which are possible in the painting of a tree. The artist may paint the tree exactly as it is, or he may take liberties, emphasizing some one thing which he sees, yet he may still be painting a recognizable tree. Another painter may translate this tree into a completely new abstract form, a painting which the tree inspired, but a scene which exists only in the painter's imagination.

Many people look for a picture to tell a story or to remind them of some past experience. Another observer may look for some entirely new experience from a painting — divorcing realism from the arrangement and appearance of light and shade, of masses, of position and of values.

"A picture has no meaning but its beauty, no message but its joy."

SILK SCREENING, art medium, has been popular with many persons interested in reproducing nature's beauties in exotic forms on Christmas cards, posters, to make glamorous textiles for clothing, draperies, table linens and furniture. The Klamath county is particularly rich in inspiration for these designers who have reproduced Mt. McLoughlin, nature in the Lava Beds, Abert Rim, Pitt River area, sagebrush, trees, rocks. The late Professor Emmy Zweybruck, trained in Vienna, made famous in America through her technique, instructed classes in silk screening here in the early days of the association. Courses will be available in design and silk screen printing in the art workshops at the new center. This design depicts Mt. McLoughlin and ice breaking up on Upper Klamath Lake.

Howe Explains Statement

Carroll Howe, who is seeking the Republican nomination for one of the two seats in the Oregon Legislative Assembly held by Klamath County, said some people apparently misunderstood his statement that he was concerned with the extent to which local governmental agencies were allowed to control their own operations, free from state regulation.

"I have long felt that government on the local level, where citizens have the greatest, almost the only opportunity for active participation, should be strengthened," Howe explained.

In this day of increasingly complex government, Howe noted, it has become increasingly difficult for most people to effectively communicate their wishes to the various governments.

"The American public is faced with rapidly expanding governmental control and rising taxes," Howe

Rabbit Pair Sent To Bend By Kiwanis

The pair of rabbits presented to the Klamath Falls Kiwanis Club last week was delivered to the Bend club Monday before the bunnies were able to display their fecundity, and have passed through the hands of at least three other clubs since.

An interclub delegation from the Grants Pass Kiwanis Club gave the animals to the local Kiwanians with the announcement that one of the bunnies would soon deliver a litter, and with the warning that the Kiwanis club in possession of the rabbits when this population explosion occurred would have to pay the club from which it received the animals two dollars per rabbit.

Keith Cobo, who headed the bunny-lugging delegation to Bend, reported at this week's Kiwanis meeting that the rabbits had since made the Madras, Redmond and Prineville Kiwanis meetings.

Kiwanians were entertained at their Thursday meeting with a program of music by the KUHS A Cappella Choir and a group from the high school orchestra, all under the direction of Dale Hallack.

Del Wright, chairman of the March 11 and 12 used suit sale, asked that anyone having a usable man's suit they wish to contribute to the sale telephone any of three dry cleaners who are picking up the clothing for processing.
