

Negro Girl 17th Victim Of Hit-Run

NEW YORK (UPI)—She lay there under the car like a large rag doll. Her once bright red hair ribbon was streaked with dirt and she was dead.

Robin Joyner, 4, a tot 3 feet, 4 inches tall was New York City's 14th hit-and-run victim in recent weeks.

Statistics say she won't be the last, but her death will be regarded as one of the most callous of those left to die by panicked drivers.

The little Negro girl was playing in front of the crowded Harlem tenement where she lived Wednesday afternoon. A sudden dash into the street, a moving taxi and Robin was struck down, severely injured.

A crowd gathered. The stocky Negro taxi driver stopped, quickly picked up the injured child and told the crowd he was rushing her to a hospital.

Robin never reached the hospital. She was found two hours later dead under a parked car, her body crumpled and broken.

James Hunter was walking along the street two blocks from the accident and two hours afterwards. He thought he saw a rag doll under a car. He reached under the car and pulled out the body of Robin.

Police officials called it "the most vicious hit-and-run case to come to our attention." Deputy Inspector Joseph J. McLaughlin said the girl had been placed under the parked car in a way which would have looked as if it had been driven away.

Of all the hit-and-run deaths—17 since Christmas—this is the one police would like most to solve.

SINCE LEXINGTON

Captain Jonas Parker was the commander of a company of Minute Men. It was Captain Parker who declared, "Stand your ground. Don't fire unless fired upon! But if they want to have a war, let it begin here!" And so it began on April 18, 1775, the war for American Independence. National Guard descendants of the Revolutionary War militia, carry the battle streamers embroidered with the campaigns of 1776-1780—Virginia... Long Island... Brandywine... Germantown... South Carolina... Saratoga... Connecticut... Yorktown... among them. The Founding Fathers of the new nation provided for the continuity of the militia in the Constitution of the United States. The unique dual Federal-State status established in the Constitution remains the keystone of National Guard service to country and community in peace and in war.

Psychiatrist Testifies

CHICAGO (UPI)—A psychiatrist testified for Mrs. Inez McDonald Neale Wednesday at her trial to win an eight million dollar share of the Zenith radio fortune. Attorneys for Mrs. Neale, Ojai, Calif., attempted to show she was mentally and physically ill at the time of her divorce from Eugene F. McDonald Jr., late founder of Zenith.

Mrs. Neale is suing to have her 1947 divorce set aside so she can claim a widow's one-third share of McDonald's estimated 24 million dollar estate. Louis G. Davidson, Mrs. Neale's attorney, reviewed the plaintiff's case about Mrs. Neale's marriage to McDonald and then asked the psychiatrist about the conditions of a hypothetical wife and husband under such circumstances.

The psychiatrist, Dr. Edwin E. McNeil, Los Angeles, expressed the opinion that the hypothetical husband was egocentric and would have a "great deal of ability to override others, to force them to his will." McNeil said the hypothetical wife was suffering from a mental illness and would not be able to transact ordinary business.

Buenos Aires, Argentina — Music, Night Life And Fun

Buenos Aires, Argentina (AP)— Buenos Aires, President Eisenhower's first stop in Argentina, is a crowded city of music, night life and fun.

The city's 3,700,000 people have at their disposal 2 racetracks, 15 soccer stadiums, an opera house, 20 theaters, a hundred movie houses, 50 athletic clubs, 500 restaurants and scores of night clubs, big and small.

Buenos Aires is South America's largest city, the eighth largest in the world and the biggest metropolis south of the equator. The population of Greater Buenos Aires is estimated at more than five million.

It is a night city. Things don't start really moving until close to midnight. The House of Deputies, in fact, thinks nothing of continuing sessions on routine matters until 4 a.m.

Most good restaurants don't start serving until 8 p.m. The big crowds don't start coming until 9:30 or 10:30.

Movies run two shows nightly, the last getting out around 1 a.m. The night clubs are open until 4 a.m.

from the airport is a divided four-lane highway with trees and grass in the center. Modern low cost apartment houses and housing developments are along the roadside much of the way.

In the city proper, countless plazas, many of them with impressive statues of Argentine heroes dot the capital. In the center of Buenos Aires is a needle-shaped obelisk which looks as if it came from the land of the pyramids. A few dozen blocks from the obelisk is the dome-topped capitol of Argentina, where Eisenhower will address a joint session of Congress.

with its women appearing in the latest styles only scant weeks after the Paris showings. And of course, as all of Argentina, the city is famous for its beef. Eisenhower will undoubtedly sample some at the state dinner in his honor here. But beef in Buenos Aires is not for presidents alone. A big filet mignon costs 50 cents (U.S.) a la carte. The Portenos (the name residents give themselves) eat more beef per capita than any other city dwellers in the world.

Tucson, Ariz., in 1899 was the site of an Indian settlement named Stjukishon.
