New Hampshire Primary Gets Special Attention

CONCORD, N. H. (AP) — Political leaders of both major parties in New Hampshire intensified the drive today to get out whopping votes for Vice President Richard M. Nixon and Sen. John F. Kennedy of Massachusetts, the two principal figures in Tuesday's presidential primary election.

The New Hampshire battle is the first of 16 state primaries in the nation. Kennedy, campaigning hard in an 11th hour push, drew substantial crowds everywhere.

The turnout and the response of his audiences indicated he has succeeded in stirring up enthusiasm among Democratic voters.

Nixon has not come into New Hampshire. Republican chiefs, led by Gov. Wesley Powell, are carrying the brunt of his campaign. They are concentrating on personal appeals, via telephone, to thousands of registered Republicans and independents.

However, as the nation's first primary, the New Hampshire election has a potentially powerful impact on the other state primaries and on the nominating conventions of both parties.

It could start a band wagon, and it could put the brakes on the drive for either candidate.

This is the first ballot-box barometer — as distinct from polls and samplings — of the popularity of Nixon and Kennedy, who may very well be the two contenders for the presidency next November.

Hence, for the past two days Kennedy has been telling New Hampshire voters that this state launched Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower on the road to the White House in 1952 and helped Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.) to become the Democratic vice-presidential nominee in 1956.

What would constitute a victory for Nixon or Kennedy?

The answer may lie in some simple figures, in the so-called "beauty contest" section of the ballot where voters indicate a direct preference for the presidency.

Catholics Show Tolerance, Says Council Of Churches

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — The World Council of Churches said today Roman Catholics are showing greater tolerance toward other churches.

"Very important members" of the Catholic hierarchy now favor complete religious liberty, it said in a pioneer study published here.

The study said when this attitude becomes a prevailing one in the Roman church, "new ways would open toward an ecumenical understanding" between Protestants and Catholics.

The study, titled "Roman Catholics and religious liberty," is the first on the subject by the World Council, which includes 172 Anglican, Orthodox and Protestant churches.

The author, Dr. A. F. Carrillo de Albornoz, said French Catholics are leading the movement for religious freedom.

"We think it necessary to stress the momentous importance, within the Roman Catholic church, of the everyday increasing stream in favor of religious liberty," said Carrillo.

He said this trend has not been condemned by the Vatican "but is, on the contrary, supported by very important members of the Roman Catholic hierarchy."

Carrillo is a research associate for a study of religious liberty by a 14-member commission within the World Council.

Carrillo said when the new opinion "becomes the official attitude of the church itself, a practical agreement with the Roman Catholic church on the real exercise of religious liberty in all countries will be possible."

"And we sincerely hope," he added, "that this time is not so far away as many fear."

The study said the Catholic church has frequently treated the question of religious freedom "in a general atmosphere of suspicion and distrust."

It added many Catholics think Protestants raise the question as a pretext to attack the Catholic church.

"Too many Protestants seem to believe that all Roman Catholics (even those who defend religious liberty) are of bad faith... or that they have as a unique goal, in all they say or do, political domination," it went on.

Carrillo said the ecumenical movement and the World Council should "substitute for this general distrustful attitude a truly ecumenical spirit of charity and understanding." He said the churches must get together for discussion of the issue.
