

Sens. Hubert, John Curry Wisconsin Voter

MADISON, Wis. (AP)—Senators Hubert H. Humphrey and John F. Kennedy are carrying the Wisconsin voter today like a prize Holstein heifer.

They are driving for support in the state's presidential primary April 5.

They mush through the slush on Main street, shaking hands. They go out at dawn to the factory gate. They call press conferences at the drop of a development. Their urgent voices vibrate over TV and radio, pursuing people across snowy fields and silent streets. They've even got their wives out with curly combs and myrrh and incense.

But they don't seem to see the coming election in the same light. Humphrey of Minnesota tends to down-grade the importance of it. He says the April 5 vote is just another primary.

Kennedy, of Massachusetts, on the other hand, says "This is it." Or he may use the terms, "make-or-break," and "the significant primary," in his bid for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Why this difference of view?

It may be because Kennedy and his backers are confident of victory. Politicians seldom say "this is it" if they have much doubt about an election result.

Humphrey's aides, by contrast, tend to be cautious. They say he has "a good chance," that he is "coming up fast now," but is probably still behind Kennedy at this stage of the campaign.

So one seeks to enhance the importance of Wisconsin on the national Democratic presidential picture. The other says he will go on battling for the nomination no matter what happens April 5.

The opinion that Kennedy is well in front, at this point, is widely held among political observers in Wisconsin—Republicans as well as Democrats, independents and those who are still yearning and hoping to be able to vote for Adlai E. Stevenson.

One highly placed Democrat, who asked not to be identified, said he expects Kennedy to sweep the boards, winning all 60 delegates with their 30 convention votes.

The majority of analysts, however, believe Kennedy will take seven districts and all the at-large delegates. This would give him 22 1/2 of Wisconsin's total delegate vote.

The allocation of delegates and votes in Wisconsin is this:

There are 10 congressional districts, each with five delegates to be elected. Each delegate has one-half vote. Thus the district delegates cast 25 votes.

In addition, there are 10 at-large delegates, who will cast five convention votes. These 10 delegates will go to the candidate who gets the largest statewide total, in other words the sum total of the votes cast in the 10 districts. The two Wisconsin members of the Democratic National Committee also will have one-half vote each at the convention, giving the Wisconsin delegation a total of 31 votes.

Humphrey's greatest strength appears to lie in the 9th and 10th districts. These border his home state of Minnesota. He has visited them often. He is sometimes known there as "Wisconsin's third senator."

The interests of the farmers on both sides of the state lines are similar. Humphrey has been speaking out for the farmers much longer than Kennedy.

The Minnesota senator also appears to have strong support in the Second Congressional District, which embraces La Crosse in western Wisconsin and has a substantial labor vote.

The question of how the mass of farmers and factory workers will vote is pure political quicksilver. You can't pick it up now.

AFL-CIO leaders in Milwaukee formed a Humphrey-for-President Club weeks ago.

But in the Kennedy headquarters, they will show you petitions for Kennedy bearing thousands of signatures from Local 72, United Automobile Workers.

As for the farmers—

The farm vote is estimated at between 15 and 18 per cent of the total vote.

Wilbur Renk, of Sun Prairie, cattle fattener and member of the University of Wisconsin Board of Regents, said "the Farmers Union seems pretty strong for Humphrey." He has come up with plans. And Wayne Legler, a dairy farmer, said "Humphrey's had more agricultural experience than Kennedy." But he added, "the older farmers, those who are already established, aren't exactly unhappy. It's the younger ones who are just getting started who are looking for someone with a plan."

Both Humphrey and Kennedy are drawing big crowds—sometimes in the same places. Both have been successful in raising money. Kennedy was a patrol torpedo boat commander in the Pacific war and his aides have sold hundreds of pins shaped like P. T. boats.

Humphrey's lieutenants are mailing close to a million five-piece letters asking for donations. Joseph Checota, in the senator's Madison office, said this brought in over $1,000 "in ones and twos, mainly," in the first three days after they were mailed.

In one respect — volunteers — Kennedy seems to be pulling more strongly than Humphrey.

Every night, in his Milwaukee headquarters, more than 50 people, mostly young men and women, are at work. The Madison office swarms with others.

Said Pat Lucky, state Democratic chairman, "there are volunteers working for Kennedy in Madison I've never seen before in any political campaign."

Fidel Castro Building Huge Force

HAVANA (AP)—Fidel Castro is building up a powerful armed force in a nation confronted with economic headaches and a shortage of foreign currency.

The revolutionary regime has launched a fund-raising campaign for arms, trumpeting that they are needed for defense against foreign aggression.

But some Cubans believe Castro, mindful of the island republic's turbulent history, is taking precautions against potential enemies at home.

"If Castro felt certain of his hold on the people, he wouldn't be calling for arms," these Cubans say. "But he knows from experience that the same crowd who cheers him today will turn upon him as they did on other popular Cuban leaders when the situation gets difficult."

He needs arms to supply not only the regular army but the civilian militia as well. If trouble comes, he'll have ready the largest armed force Cuba has ever seen.

The government has used the explosion of the French freighter La Coubre while delivering munitions in Havana harbor to spur a funds-for-arms campaign that began more than six months before.

By official estimate, some two million pesos (equal to dollars in Cuba but worth much less on the world market) were raised before the La Coubre tragedy which took between 80 and 100 lives.

The Castro government has officially identified the United States as the chief aggressor against Cuba. The pro-Castro radio and press whipped up antagonism against the United States with pleas for more defense contributions. Today in Havana's streets, people sound more concerned with who blew up the arms than what the arms were for.

Ask a Cuban today if he actually believes the United States would invade Cuba and the answer is likely to be an unqualified "yes."

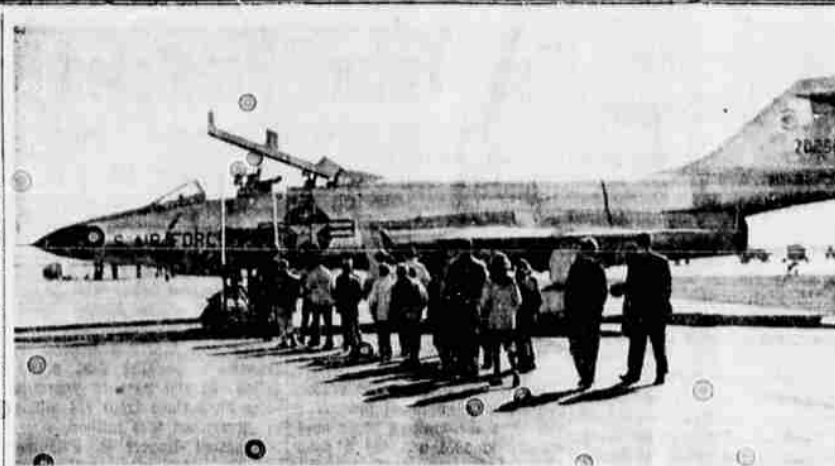

Some anti-Castro Cubans wonder out loud why American Marines don't come here to "straighten things out."

Lad Abducts Housewife

KALAMA, Wash. (AP) — A young housewife told police a knife-wielding teenager abducted her in Portland Thursday night and then disappeared after her car ran out of gas near here.

Mrs. Patricia Girt, 23, of Portland, said the youth, about 17, jumped into her car at a southeast Portland street intersection and ordered her to drive him to Seattle.

She said the boy said practically nothing as she drove to Kalama. He didn't say where he was from or why he wanted to go to Seattle.

The car ran out of gas a mile and a half south of Kalama. The boy ordered her to walk back to a service station, which she did. When she returned, the boy had disappeared.

Large Sum Given By Jury

DALLAS, Tex. (AP) — The largest jury award for damages ever made in Dallas County was given a widow and her two children Thursday.

Courthouse veterans said the $253,161.51 awarded Ruth Stevens and her children, Susan, 9, and Thomas Stevens Jr., 7, topped any previous award by $75,000.

A jury in 101st Dist. Court ruled that Carl B. Schaefer, Dallas oilman, was driver of the car in which Thomas Stevens Sr. and another man died when it struck a tree here Aug. 23, 1958.

Stevens was executive vice president of Tex-Mex Corp., an investments firm, and was owner of a motel. Trial testimony said his earnings when he died were $1,500 monthly.

Defense attorneys were expected to appeal.
