

CYNTHIA CAMPBELL is shown at her post in the county court chambers in the courthouse.

Courthouse Receptionist Representative Of Klamath

By NORM CARDOZA
Mrs. Robert Campbell is fairly representative of the average Klamath Area resident.

For one thing, she was not born here. She and her husband migrated from Fayetteville, Arkansas, in August, 1951.

Both are solid members of the Klamath Falls Church of Christ. He is a church elder. She teaches a women's Bible class Wednesday evenings.

They have a son, James, 27, who is a minister and who preaches here every Sunday. They also have two daughters, Mrs. O. D. Lullar of Klamath Falls, and Mrs. Ray Di Biasi of Whittier, California. And they have three grandchildren.

Both enjoy sports. They used to patronize the defunct Klamath Falls Cubs and other local baseball teams. They also enjoy watching basketball and playing golf. Campbell used to pitch for high school and bush league teams.

They live quietly at 2115 Home-dale road in their own home, now that the children all have married.

Campbell services engines and does some switching for the Great Northern Railway in Klamath Falls.

Mrs. Campbell, better known to those who frequent the county courthouse as "Cynthia," has something to do with county court land sales, as the plaque on her desk there indicates. Actually, she is courthouse receptionist and general handywoman with a host of jobs to do. Many people, when they first hit the marbled caverns in the courthouse, don't know where to go to find what they are looking for. They usually come to Mrs. Campbell's office just inside the main door to ask directions.

She also distributes the courthouse mail, handles paper work for the county court and has dozens of other various jobs to do. The couple left Arkansas, where they lived all their lives, because Campbell's brother was living here and because Arkansas is too hot. Mrs. Campbell gets nostalgic about her home state but wouldn't want to go back there to live. The Campbells go back to visit occasionally.

She likes the town and the people here, but says Arkansas folk are more hospitable, usually.

"People move a little too fast here," she said. "Back there folks are unhurried and more friendly, especially to visitors."

The Campbells went through high school together near Green-land, Arkansas. They were married in 1931.

Mrs. Campbell once worked before marriage, as a typewriter, printer and secretary for the Fayetteville Democrat, a weekly newspaper.

John Lardner, Columnist, Dies At 47

NEW YORK (UPI)—John Lardner, 47-year-old columnist and son of famed humorist Ring Lardner, died of a heart attack Thursday night while writing the obituary of another noted columnist-humorist, Franklin P. Adams.

Lardner was at his best when reminiscing about the varied celebrities he had known for years. His columns would recall intimate glimpses of their lives with an easy, off-hand manner. His bemused, sometimes wistful, style was noted for its quiet humor that could gracefully include a note of tragedy.

Once described as "a sort of high-priced utility infielder for top echelon American magazines," Lardner had been a columnist and contributing editor of Newsweek Magazine since 1959.

Lardner also wrote many books. They included "White Hopes and Other Tigers," "Strong Cigars and Lovely Women," "It Beats Working," "The Yanks in the Pacific," and "Southwest Passage." Lardner's death leaves only one of Ring Lardner's four sons alive. James was killed while fighting in the Lincoln Brigade in the Spanish Civil War. David was killed while a war correspondent for the New Yorker in Germany in 1944. Surviving is Ring Jr., a playwright and free lance writer. Lardner is also survived by his widow, Hazel, two daughters, Susan, 20, and Mary Jane, 18, and one son, John, 16.

Lotts Land - Don't Fence Me In

COSTA MESA, Calif. (AP)—A year ago Clarence Lott built a grape stake fence. He asked neighbor Robert Darnell if he wanted to share the cost. Darnell said no. Recently, Darnell decided to fence his property. He asked Lott if he could use the grape stake fence along one side. No, said Lott.

right down to the sidewalk. He painted it with polka dots, on Lott's side only.

Now Lott is building a third fence, to screen the polka dots. It will be whitewashed.

And then, he said, he will move away.

The largest hailstone, verified by the U.S. Weather Bureau, weighed one and a half pounds.

THE REV. ALBERT BROYLES tends a crosswalk daily at Mills School and gets to know hundreds of the area's children. He is hired by the school district. He is a specially deputized city policeman.

Crosswalk Being Guarded By Retired Clergyman, 81

By NORM CARDOZA
"How old do you think I am?" asked the Rev. Albert Broyles, retired, who tends a crosswalk in front of Mills Elementary School. I judged 80, and that much only because of the former minister's ivory mane.

He is almost 81 and in remarkable health, Reverend Broyles thinks, speaks and acts as keenly as ever and seems to be getting an enormous kick out of life.

For one thing, he is working at a job he likes. It looks boring. He stands at the corner of East Main Street and Orchard Avenue five hours per day directing children across the street.

But he likes children and children like him. He helps hundreds of them every day.

Like so many oldtimers in the Klamath Basin, Reverend Broyles was not born here. In fact, he arrived as late as 1952 from his home states, Nebraska and Iowa. Naturally, he still feels deeply rooted to them, but he likes the West, too.

He "was called" at 16, attended Potomac University in the East and was ordained a minister of Emmanuel Baptist Church during 1902 in Mahaska County, Iowa.

He was pastor of the church here for three years during three of the early depression years, then returned to Nebraska and was pastor in several areas there. He retired after 50 years of preaching in 1952.

Once in a while, he still preaches at the local church, and he handles a Sunday school class. Talking to Reverend Broyles is a real pleasure. He is sincere, good natured, thoughtful, honest and open-minded.

During his six years on the job at Mills, not a child has been injured at his crosswalk, though auto and foot traffic is heavy. Youngsters hit a refreshment stand across the street like a cyclone, just when traffic is getting heavy.

Reverend Broyles gets to know nearly all the children at Mills. A few come to visit him after they are in high school or beyond.

He and Mrs. Broyles live at 2257 Gary Street. Their son Greydon and his wife lives across the street.
