Slaughter
In Field
Tightened

The practice of tossing a few knives into a car and rolling into the country to perform livestock slaughter services is now illegal.

An order of the State Department of Agriculture, signed February 25 and now effective, sets up facility, sanitation and identification requirements for mobile slaughterers. The last legislature brought the "on wheels" slaughter operators under state license ($50) and regulation.

The order is of immediate concern to any traveling operator "who engages in the business of slaughtering meat food animals for farmers on farms or at any other location."

It requires that equipment must be maintained and operations performed in a sanitary manner, and that carcasses must be stamped with the mobile slaughterer's license number. If transported, they also need the regular producer's tag.

At request of the farmer, mobile operators may transport a carcass to a plant for cutting and wrapping for the farmer, but must leave the carcass at this destination. Offal and hide cannot be hauled in the same vehicle as carcasses.

New facility requirements include a covered truck, smooth metal interiors, sterilizing tanks for utensils, a built-in water tank under pressure or a water hose which can be connected to the farm water system.

Regularly licensed slaughterhouses may operate mobile outfits without additional license, but must meet other requirements established in the new order. Copies of the regulation are available from the State Department of Agriculture, Division of Animal Industry, Salem.

BLONDES PREFERRED

NEW YORK (UPI)—California is the top market for color hair rinse, reports Ellen Noreen Baum, creator of hair rinses (Noreen).

Metropolitan New York also is a top market, but the rest of New York state is conservative, Mrs. Baum said. Big-city women go in for lightening, toning down the hair, and use of glamorous colors.

There are approximately 200 million pounds of honey produced in the U.S. each year.
