LITTLE LIZ

The U.S. has more food per capita than any other country, and more diets to keep you from eating it.

Start College In Summer Is Suggestion

OREGON STATE COLLEGE — Fall is the traditional time to begin college but starting in the summer has several advantages and should be considered seriously by many students, the dean of education at Oregon State College believes.

Summer session is an ideal time to "try your wings" and to learn what college-level study and college subjects are like, Dr. F. R. Zeran points out.

Classes are smaller and there's greater opportunity for individual attention, he adds. Concentrated summer study has fewer outside distractions as well, Zeran maintains, and is a good time for "exploring different fields of study to determine the one to which the student is best suited."

Some of the testing and counseling that may be needed to help find the right career field for the student can be taken care of in the summer, thereby saving time in fall term, he said. By taking foundation courses in the summer, more time can be devoted during the regular school year to specialized or professional courses, Zeran continued.

"Summer work is often necessary to build up the bank account for school expenses, but there is another point of view to consider," he noted. "Earning capacity increases with a college degree and the sooner you can finish college, the sooner you can be gainfully employed at a higher rate."

Elementary teachers, for example, may fulfill all requirements for a degree and have a state teaching certificate in three summers and three regular school years, instead of the usual four years, Zeran explained.

Selective admission requirements adopted by Oregon colleges have put new emphasis on summer work also as a means of qualifying for college entrance, he said.

matter of FACT

In 1660, the Colony of Massachusetts forbade the celebration of Christmas. Punishment was a fine of five shillings. As early as 1621, Christmas merrymaking had come under the scornful eye of the pilgrims. Governor Bradford of Plymouth Colony had been shocked to find newcomers playing games in the streets on Christmas Day. The players were sent home.

OF MICE—AND WOMEN

Washington (UPI)—Girl babies exposed to X-ray three months before birth may become sterile adults. This theory, based on research with female mice exposed to X-ray before birth, was reported recently by Dr. W. L. Russell and associates at a meeting of the National Academy of Sciences.
