A Look Ahead At Cotton Styles

By GAIL DUGAN
NEA Women's Editor

NEW YORK (NEA) — Cotton fashions rate consideration now, in the midst of spring, for two reasons: a tropical island vacation now and a forward glance at summer.

Indispensable to any warm weather wardrobe are the separates now solidly identified with American living. And for excellent reasons. They stretch out a wardrobe. The same top can be worn with skirts or slacks or Bermuda shorts. They are often cut from drip-dry cottons and need only a touch-up with an iron, thus saving valuable time. And they come in beautiful prints, stripes and solids.

This year, there are little cut-away jackets that are new for the tropical or summer scene. Some stop at the waistline and some have a boxy cut and are hip-length. They can be worn equally well with straight or pleated skirts, for an effect that's typically American, typically casual. Some of them can go over swimsuits and thus double their usefulness.

Big sleeves, seen in important spring fashions, are part of cotton fashions, too. They may be puffed, tiered or flared. They look their best on tops meant to be worn with narrow pants or shorts.

Like the trench coat, the little black dress and the great coat, the shirtwaist dress has become an American classic. Its opposite, this summer, is the little girl gingham done up in stripes or checks and in candy colors. Ruffled with eyelet embroidery or lace, laced with ribbons and worn over layers of petticoats, it conveys the wide-eyed and innocent look. This is obviously a youthful fashion where as the shirtwaist is for everyone from teenager to chic grand mother.

OVER THE GARDEN GATE

KLAMATH FALLS
GARDEN CLUB

Fifth grade students of Frank Meyers and Howard Davies led the flag salute. Room count was won by Mrs. Betty French's second grade.

SCIENCE comes to the aid of girls with tender ears. No more ear-pinchings with these new magic, magnetic ear clips designed by Cora. Requiring no clips, wire or screws, the earrings stay put by action of a magnetic disk that slips behind the earlobe and holds the front part firmly in place. The earring comes in two sections, the disk separate from the decorative front part.
