Wage Boost For Teachers Requested

By LOUIS CASSELS
 WASHINGTON (UPI) — Americans were challenged today to accept as their "national goals" in education a 50 per cent boost in teachers' salaries by 1983, and a 25 billion dollar school building program over the next decade.

These admittedly "drastic" goals were proposed in a staff study prepared by the U.S. Office of Education for discussion at a conference attended by leaders of 100 educational organizations.

The conference was called by Arthur S. Flemming, secretary of health, education and welfare. Flemming emphasized to reporters that the Office of Education report was simply a "basis for discussion" at the conference, and did not necessarily reflect administration thinking.

Professional Appraisal
 However, Dr. Lawrence G. Derthick, commissioner of education, described the report in a forward as "a professional appraisal of the factual situation" facing Americans in their attempt to build and maintain an adequate public school system.

The report said it is "essential" to national survival that "a substantial improvement in the quality of American education be brought about in the decade ahead."

With the nation locked in a life-or-death technological race with Russia, the report said, it is a matter of "fearful urgency" to overcome the classroom and teacher shortages now plaguing public schools.

Attract Good Teachers
 To attract good teachers in sufficient quantity, it said, salaries must be "competitive with those in other occupations requiring equivalent training and experience."

The report said this will require raising average teachers' salaries 50 per cent from $4,959 to $7,439 annually by the 1963-64 school year, with continued increases thereafter at a rate of about 3 per cent a year.

TO HOLD ELECTIONS
 VIENNA (UPI) — The Czech Communist cabinet decided Monday to hold general elections June 12. In the last general elections in Czechoslovakia held in the fall of 1964, the unopposed "National Front" group won 98 per cent of the vote.
