Doctor's Degree Work Rates High

OREGON STATE COLLEGE—Oregon State College has become one of the nation's major institutions for doctor's degree work, according to national reports received by President A. L. Strand.

The reports show that OSC ranks seventh in the Far east and 47th in the nation in the number of doctor's degree graduates in the past five years.

OSC has averaged 48 doctor's degree graduates during each of the past five years. That number is expected to double beginning in 1961 when it is anticipated that more than 100 doctor's degrees will be conferred at June commencement.

Nearly half of the record number 750 graduate students enrolled this year at OSC are working for their doctor's degrees, according to Dr. H. P. Hansen, dean of the graduate school. OSC has one of the highest percentages of its graduate students working for doctor's degrees in the country, Dean Hansen noted.

Graduate school enrollment at Oregon State has increased so markedly during the last decade that today one out of every 10 students on campus is taking graduate work, Hansen added.

University of Washington is the Northwest leader with an average of 107 doctor's degrees each year since 1954. The other five are from California. University of Oregon is 64th.

The OSC graduate school enrollment includes students from 43 states and from 18 different foreign countries. Nearly half of the graduate students are majoring in scientific fields with 153 working for doctor's degrees in science. Practically all of the doctor's degree dissertations are concerned with basic research.

Chemistry is the departmental leader with 51 doctor's degree candidates, followed by general science, mathematics, botany, physics, zoology, agricultural economics, soils, entomology, electrical engineering and forest management.

Kit Used In Bacteria Test

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (UPI)—Robert N. Frahm, a veteran Grand Rapids bacteriologist, has designed a unit that enables a novice to make positive bacterial tests as quickly and as cheaply as a trained and fully equipped expert.

Frahm, for 10 years the owner of an independent bacteriological testing laboratory serving dairy plants in the area, has developed a compact, table-sized laboratory that includes a kit for individual tests.

Frahm's unit was designed originally for use in dairies, but he said it is also practical in wineries and other food processing plants where constant bacterial control is essential.

The kits are made up of pre-measured dilution tubes and agar, along with sealed plastic ware, all sterile when received. The test chemicals are used once and discarded. No sterilizing or "dish washing" — often responsible for as much as 80 per cent of a laboratory's time — is required.
