Scribe Mulls Man's Taste In Reading

NEW YORK (AP)—It is said you can tell a man by his library.

But this assumes he has read the books in his library. Often he hasn't.

A truer appraisal in most cases, probably, is that you can tell by a man's library what he aspires to be—if he only had time. Most men's libraries aren't made up of the books they have read and treasured. They are made up of the books they intend to read someday—some day when there isn't something more pressing to do.

To be literate a man doesn't have to read a large number of books. He needs only to know a few choice books well, and to increase his understanding by re-reading them.

Even three books can produce a well-stocked mind. These books are the dictionary, the Bible, and a collection of Shakespeare's works. No one who knows those three books well is less learned than he who has skimmed 10,000 other books.

A man's reading taste is usually a prisoner of his age. In youth he prefers romantic fiction, but as he grows older he likes to read factual material because life has taught him there is nothing more romantic than the truth, or more novel.

The trouble with a library is that if you have a really good book it somehow gets away from you. You either lend it deliberately or someone borrows it by his own choice, but in either case it rarely comes back home. It travels from hand to hand and mind to mind until it is worn out.

Everyone's library is an index of his postponed reading pleasures. Those row after row of dust-catching books aren't there just to awe the neighbors. He really means to get around to reading them some time when he has more leisure than he has now.

Everyone has his own favorite unread book. I have two in my library.

One is called "How to Raise a Dog in the Suburbs." Since I live in a city apartment where only cats and mute parakeets are allowed as pets, I haven't got around to reading this important book. But I still keep it handy for an emergency.

My other favorite unread book is entitled "How to Retire Before 40."

It is already 10 years too late for me to find anything except an antiquarian interest in this volume.

City Council Expresses Reluctance DUNSMUIR—The city council expressed reluctance to reverse a planning commission decision at a special meeting Monday morning but granted Ed Cripps permission to rebuild on the foundation of his fire-damaged building.

This building permit has been delayed since early this year because the original building predated building codes and zoning ordinances.

Cripps failed to start rebuilding the fire-gutted commercial structure in the 1100 block on Florence Avenue within the time limit provided by the codes.

The permit was originally refused because it did not meet setback and clearance requirements and has been the subject of controversy for months.

Cripps pointed out to the council that the lot size did not allow for setbacks. He proposes to build a two-unit apartment on the site. The council approved the permit and ordered a public hearing Monday morning, with the exception that side yard clearances be at least five feet.

Cottar dispatched deputies from Yreka and Tulelake to a ranch near Mount Hebron Saturday night, October 1, to investigate a report that a man was threatening persons with a rifle. Upon arrival at the scene, deputies found the report was the result of a family argument.

Cottar was advised by Jackson County authorities late Wednesday that a missing Cessna 172 aircraft has been located in Oregon.

The plane disappeared August 16 while on a flight from Bellingham to Modesto. It had been the object of a widespread search in Siskiyou County since that time.
