Let's Draw a Toucan

By Ann Davidow

The toucan has a great big beak. It makes this jungle bird a freak.

Just looking at him, you can see The toucan's bill weighs more than he.

A Do-Something Jingle

Cross the Line

By Ida M. Pardue

Draw three lines with crayon
Across a paper sheet;
Not too close together,
Make them straight and neat.

Close your eyes and try
Three times to cross a line;
Each cross counts three points,
And a perfect score is nine.

Circus Game

By Maude E. Hallmer

For this game, the players are divided into two teams—the monkeys and the clowns. Unshelled peanuts are hidden around the room before the guests arrive. Have two paper bags, one marked "clowns" and one marked "monkeys." One child is the ringmaster. At a signal the players start hunting for peanuts. No one but the ringmaster may touch them, so when a clown finds a peanut he laughs loudly until the ringmaster comes to get it and put it in the clown bag. When a monkey finds one, he chatters "chee-chee-chee" like a monkey until the ringmaster gets the peanut and puts it in the monkey bag. A time limit is set for the game. When time is up, the peanuts in each bag are counted and, of course, the team with the most peanuts is declared the winner.

Scoop!

By Matthew Andrews

Find a funnel and a rubber ball that will fit in the top of it, and you're ready to play this game. Bounce the ball on the floor and catch it in the funnel, using your right hand the first round and later try your left. Then bounce the ball against a wall and catch it in the funnel. Each time you succeed, add a point to your score.

If you have two funnels, play catch with a partner. Count a point for each miss in this case, so the high scorer loses!

What the Captain Says!

By Nat Bradford

The Captain says what to do, and the other players obey orders. Perhaps the Captain says very quickly: "I say march!" and starts marching. The others march, too. But if he says: "I say stop!" but keeps on marching, the others must pay no attention to what he does, just do what he says. Obey orders, no matter how the Captain confuses you, or you are out of the game.
