

OTI DIRECTOR RETURNS FROM TOUR OF EASTERN TECHNICAL INSTITUTES

Dr. W. D. Purvine, director of ECPD and the American Society for Engineering Education, returned recently from a two-week tour of eastern technical institutes including a meeting of the Engineering Council for Professional Development, the accrediting agency for engineering colleges and technical institutes, in Montreal.

Purvine is a member of the Oregon Technical Institute, which completed its move into a new facility at a new site approximately October 3, 4, and 5. Both organizations are joint U.S. and Canada.

The Mohawk Valley Technical Institute in Utica, New York, where Purvine spent one day, has recently progressed through a situation similar to that now facing Oregon Tech. It has not quite completed its move into a new facility at a new site approximately October 3, 4, and 5. Both organizations are joint U.S. and Canada.

Purvine spent October 13-14 at the State University Agriculture and Technical Institute at Farmingdale, New York. He visited the school in 1952 and states the changes in program development are very similar to those that have occurred at Oregon Tech during the same period. Most of the buildings are not completely occupied and only partly finished. Now the buildings are bulging at the seams for 11 hours a day." The institute has an enrollment of 1,800. "The trip was especially productive of information concerning the most recent progress and development of technical institute education," according to Purvine, "and that information is particularly valuable at this stage of the new campus planning."
