Sewage Lagoons Prove Helpful

OREGON STATE COLLEGE—Disposal of sewage and industrial wastes in oxidation lagoons appears feasible for Western Oregon, research by Oregon State College indicates, but another year of work is planned before final recommendations can be made.

The low-cost lagoons are used widely in the Midwest and Southwest but their use in high rainfall regions has been limited by lack of research. The OSC experiment, started in 1958 with the cooperation of Corvallis city and the State Sanitary Authority, was the first to be tried in this type climate.

The experimental lagoon is 2.3 acres in size with varying depths up to three feet. It is constructed adjacent to the Corvallis sewage treatment plant.

Inexpensive to build and operate, the lagoons have found favor with small communities and industries which are unable to afford sewage treatment plants, OSC engineers pointed out. However, large communities are using them also where sufficient land is available.

Reductions in sewage disposal costs of from $10 to $20 per capita have been reported.

In charge of the OSC study are Fred J. Burgess and Martin Northcraft of the civil engineering department. They have just received a new grant of $8,900 from the National Institutes of Health to carry research on through 1961.

During the coming year, emphasis will be on determining the waste load capacity of the lagoon; operational problems and possibilities with various types of sewage and industrial wastes; best ways to achieve mosquito control; and growth of algae that is an essential part of the oxidation process. Odors are not a problem unless the lagoon becomes overloaded.

matter of FACT

Airplanes fly over 1500 miles per hour. Even an automobile has gone over 300 miles an hour. But in 1908, without jet engines or gasoline, the iceboat was the fastest ride man could take. Commodore Elisha Price sailed his iceboat, the "Clarel," 140 miles an hour—faster than any man had gone.

CURB YOUR CAR

MONTPELIER, Vt. (UPI)—Municipal Judge Joseph Foti fined Robert Perry, 19, of Allentown, Pa., $10 for a motor vehicle violation and told him "good looking boys don't have to drive on sidewalks to attract girls."

THE MAN WHO OWNS ONE

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (UPI)—Patrolman Frank Gambardella could tell as soon as he saw the car speeding past that it was a stolen automobile. After all, Gambardella said after collaring the thief, it was his car.
