

Farmers Earn Less, Says Expert

CORVALLIS (AP)—An Oregon State College extension agricultural economist said Saturday Oregon farmers appear to be pocketing less money this year than last.

Mrs. Elvera Horrell said cash receipts from farm marketings in the first seven months lag behind the same months last year by about 4 per cent.

She said the decline appeared to result from generally lower prices on livestock products and a smaller total output of crops.

She said when the harvest is completed farmers expect more corn and oats, but less wheat and barley than last year.

Fruit and nut crops have been hard hit by weather, and only apples promise to top last year's output.

Mrs. Horrell said corn appeared to be headed for a record production year with acreage and yields up. Oats production inclined upward with good yields per acre, although acreage had been cut.

Oregon's wheat crop lags behind last year. Barley is down in both yields per acre and acreage.

The hay crop may be the largest since records were started 50 years ago.

Mrs. Horrell said pears were hurt by poor pollinating weather and scattered early frosts. Cherries were badly nicked by weather and Oregon's prune crop was virtually wiped out.

Filbert tonnage is down. Walnuts were expected to reach only half the mark achieved last year.

Both sweet corn and snap beans are expected to top all previous highs. Canning beets may also top last year's near-average crop.

Looking at fresh vegetables, she said onions were short of last year and cabbage was down. Larger yields were expected for broccoli, carrots and cauliflower.

Historians Hold Meet

PORTLAND (AP)—Fraternalization of opposing armies and a display of chivalry marked the Civil War, whose centennial will be observed next year, members of the Oregon Historical Society were told at their annual meeting Friday evening.

It was said T. Harry Williams, "a wonderful war and goodness knows when it will be over." Williams is professor of history at Louisiana State University and a recognized authority on the Civil War.

If the masses of the people had been handling matters, the fighting could have been averted or ended in short order, he said.

The hundredth anniversary of the start of the war will be observed widely in the United States next year.

Eugene Marsh, McMinnville, was reelected by the board of directors to another term as president of the state society and all other officers were returned with him. New directors elected to four-year terms: Stewart Holbrook, Tom Lawson McCall, Walter W. B. May, John Youell and Homer Shaver, all Portland; Lorain L. Stewart, Cottage Grove; Gerald W. Frank and Chandler Brown, Salem; and Lynn McCready, Eugene.

Department Gives Up Probe For Gun Owner

SALEM (AP)—The state Military Department said Friday it has given up the search for the rightful owner of a World War I German machine gun found hidden last month in a cave near Seaside.

The gun, complete with tripod, was found by two small boys on an exploring expedition.

The gun bore a painted legend identifying its date of capture in 1918 by the 79th Division.

Military Department information officer Maj. Harvey Latham said the gun apparently was stolen from some veterans club or museum, but that a check with police agencies, the 79th Division Association in Philadelphia and the Federal Bureau of Investigation had failed to develop clues to the gun's owner.

Latham said the gun could not be turned over to the finders because federal law prohibits private ownership of machine guns.

The weapon, he said, will be reconditioned and installed as a military relic at one of the National Guard installations.

NO LOVE LOST

BERKHAMSTED, Eng. (UPI)—John Manship, 19, who said he wanted to commit suicide to prove to his girlfriend, Ann Jones, that he loved her, changed his mind because "I wanted to stay alive to see the effect."
