Four Busy Lives Led By British U.N. Delegate

Britain's only woman delegate to the 15th session of the U.N. General Assembly is a slender, attractive Scotswoman with honey-blonde hair, a deceptively relaxed manner—and a formidable capacity for work.

Two careers, home and office, are about all the average woman can manage with equanimity. Priscilla Tweedsmuir, wife of John Buchan, 2nd Baron Tweedsmuir, carries on at least four separate lives, each of them a full one.

As Britain's representative on the Third (social questions) Committee, she and her 31 co-members are about to get their teeth into an agenda so crowded with abstruse problems (freedom of information, refugees, the right of asylum, human rights generally) that they may not be finished by Christmas.

"I can't say how many hours a day we'll work; it's my first assembly. But if it's like most committees, I imagine we'll start in a more or less leisurely fashion and by the end of the session be working evenings and weekends too."

Lady Tweedsmuir's second life is an extremely busy member of Parliament. Her special subjects are economic planning, women in industry and European affairs. Since 1948 she has represented the Scottish constituency of Aberdeen South, and she divides her time between Westminster and Scotland, traveling north every Thursday night. One full day a week she spends visiting voters, talking over local problems and getting the feel of her district on national affairs.

Her third career is in business. She is director and parliamentary adviser of a well-known public relations firm with wide Anglo-American interests. This claims another day of her working week.

TV appearances, lectures, the writing of political articles, and service as Scottish chairman of the British Council and as honorable colonel of the WRACs also occupy her time.

Fourth, and most important, comes Lady Tweedsmuir's own life as wife and mother.

Virtually without help, she runs an apartment in London and a house in Scotland. She has a singularly handsome husband with a full-blown political career of his own, an 11-year-old daughter, two grown daughters by a previous marriage (her first husband was killed in action in World War II), and — incredibly, since she looks as though she had just graduated from college — a five-year-old grandson. All of them feel deserving of special attention.

"I could never let my family down. If they need me, if they're in trouble, I'm always there. I don't believe women should cease to be women just because they have a career. But neither could I neglect my other work. If there's a crisis of any sort, I just work longer, get less sleep."

How does Lady Tweedsmuir manage to juggle these conflicting demands?

"Well, chiefly by trying to use what my father-in-law used to call the 'compartment mind.' I haven't mastered it yet, but I'm getting better. The idea is to concentrate all your attention on whatever you're doing—to thrust out all the other things from your mind. If you can do that, it's much less tiring and much more efficient."

Presumably it also requires a rather special type of husband? "Well, it means everything to be not only happily married but to have one's husband interested in what one is doing. In my own case, I'm very lucky. My husband is a member of the House of Lords, we have mutual friends, the same interests. He has been a delegate to the U.N."

But who looks after him when his wife is absent for long stretches?

"He looks after himself! He does his own cooking and tidying up. He's quite good at it."

Like every career woman, Lady Tweedsmuir recognized the need for shortcuts.

She does her marketing by telephone—"except for things like fish and vegetables; when we're in London I always choose those myself"—and holds her entertainment to a minimum—"generally in the House of Commons, or the House of Lords; occasionally we'll have friends to stay in Scotland."

"I get them off the peg. I'd feel terrible sitting around all day in a Dior costume, even if I could afford to, which I can't. I'm a bad shopper, I know. I try to do it all at once. I'd be a good shopper if I lived in New York and had more time."

What type of costume carries her from a morning conference to an evening reception?

"Well, I usually wear sleeveless dresses — dark colors are more suitable for men's assemblies, don't you think? — with a removable jacket."

Doesn't she need a maid to keep her clothes in order when she travels?

"A what? Good heavens, not I can't afford a maid even in London, how could I travel with one? I have a traveling iron."

Advice to the working woman? "Any woman who has a career needs to be very strong physically. She always has to do dishes and vegetables; when we're in London I always choose those myself — and holds her entertainment to a minimum — generally in the House of Commons, or the House of Lords; occasionally we'll have friends to stay in Scotland. It's not a bit constructive."

Yreka PTA

YREKA—Room mothers of the Yreka Elementary School Parent Teachers Association learned the functions of a room mother when they heard a talk by Robert Reynolds, school superintendent, at their first meeting last week.

He explained that in addition to giving parties, aiding with the Halloween parade, and the annual carnival, a room mother could create a better understanding between parents and the school, welcome new parents in the community, and aid the teachers.

Room representatives Mrs. W. B. Flock announced Halloween party schedules for each grade.

Three other parties will be given through the year for Christmas, Valentine Day and the last day of school.

The Halloween parade and show were arranged by the recreation committee under the supervision of Robert Weber.

Ruth McKinnie, daughter of the Rev. and Mrs. Marshall A. McKinnie, helped create costumes for the 40 member cast of "Orchids by Wire," an original musical comedy presented at Wellesley College in October. Each year members of the junior class write and produce a junior show. Ruth is vice president of the campus service organization which coordinates social service activities of Wellesley students.

Dottie Riker, accompanied by Claudia Easterly of Hood River, spent the weekend at the home of her parents, Dr. and Mrs. J. T. Riker. Both girls are freshmen at Oregon State College.

Sojourners

Klamath Falls Sojourners met October 26 in the Pine Grove room of the Willard Hotel. A short business meeting followed a buffet luncheon. The remainder of the afternoon was spent playing cards.

Newcomers to Klamath Falls present for their first meeting were Mrs. Helen Bauer, Mrs. Tommie Stuart, Mrs. Ruth Dexter and Mrs. Harriet Starkey. Present for her second meeting was Mrs. Joette Leavell. New members attending their third meeting were Mrs. Bunny Jensen and Mrs. Elsie Taylor.

Hostesses for the afternoon were Mrs. Bertha Strite, Mrs. Viola Nelson and Mrs. Louise Guise.

Prizes were awarded to the following: Mildred Dressler, high in bridge; Mrs. Eve Ashley, second in bridge; Mrs. Anna Cook, high in canasta, and Mrs. Elsie Taylor, high in pinocle.

Newcomers to Klamath Falls who are interested in Sojourners may obtain further information by calling Mrs. C. N. Garrison at TU 2-0329.

The next regular meeting will be Wednesday, November 9, at the Willard Hotel.

OVER THE GARDEN GATE

The Greensprings Garden Club met in October at the home of Mrs. Lane Smith Sr. on the Keno Highway. A tour of her lovely garden and social hour preceded the regular meeting.

Co-hostesses with Mrs. Smith were Katherine Billings and Opal Parisotto.

In honor of the club's first year of organization, cupcakes decorated with one candle were served as refreshments.

Mrs. Florence Harkins, president, opened the meeting by reading a prayer from the National Gardener.

Mrs. Will Woods of the Klamath Falls Garden Club gave an interesting talk and demonstration on making Christmas decorations.
