New Mexico-one of the oldest of our 50 states, and yet one of the newest. When Santa Fe, its capital, was founded by white men, the Pilgrims had not yet landed at Plymouth Rock. But New Mexico was relatively late in achieving the status of statehood.

New Mexico's government goes back to the ancient institution of feudalism. The members of its early aristocracy received their lands as fiefs bestowed by kings.

New Mexico is a study in contrast.

Those of us who flit through the Southwest from time to time are more familiar with places to eat and sleep than with their institutions of the regions we flit through.

Let's start with Taos, up in the far north.

In Taos, there is La Dona Luz. It is a restaurant. Its founder was a fabulous character. As a child . . . of mixed Spanish and native blood . . . she was what amounted to a serf. She saw Indian sieges of aristocratic haciendas . . . and escaped barely with her life.

The restaurant that bears her name is a must for the tourist. By deliberate intent, it is kept almost exactly as it was when it was the center of the robust life of half-Spanish, half - American New Mexico.

Then there is La Fonda, in Santa Fe itself. It stands on the exact spot that was occupied by a combination inn and trading post in the days when Santa Fe was the Mecca of the American Mountain Men.

It is now one of the loveliest and most charming hotels of Western America. It has retained all of its ancient flavor in its halls, its lobbies, its dining rooms and its guest rooms.

Now for the contrast. Moving on from Taos- once the winter hang-out for the American Mountain Men who spent their summers trapping the beaver and eluding the hostile Indians and now one of America's most famous art centers- and from lovely and historic Santa Fe- there is Albuquerque- named for the Duke of Albuquerque, who as viceroy of Mexico ordered it to be built 60 miles farther down the Rio Grande because the Santa Fe area was getting too crowded.

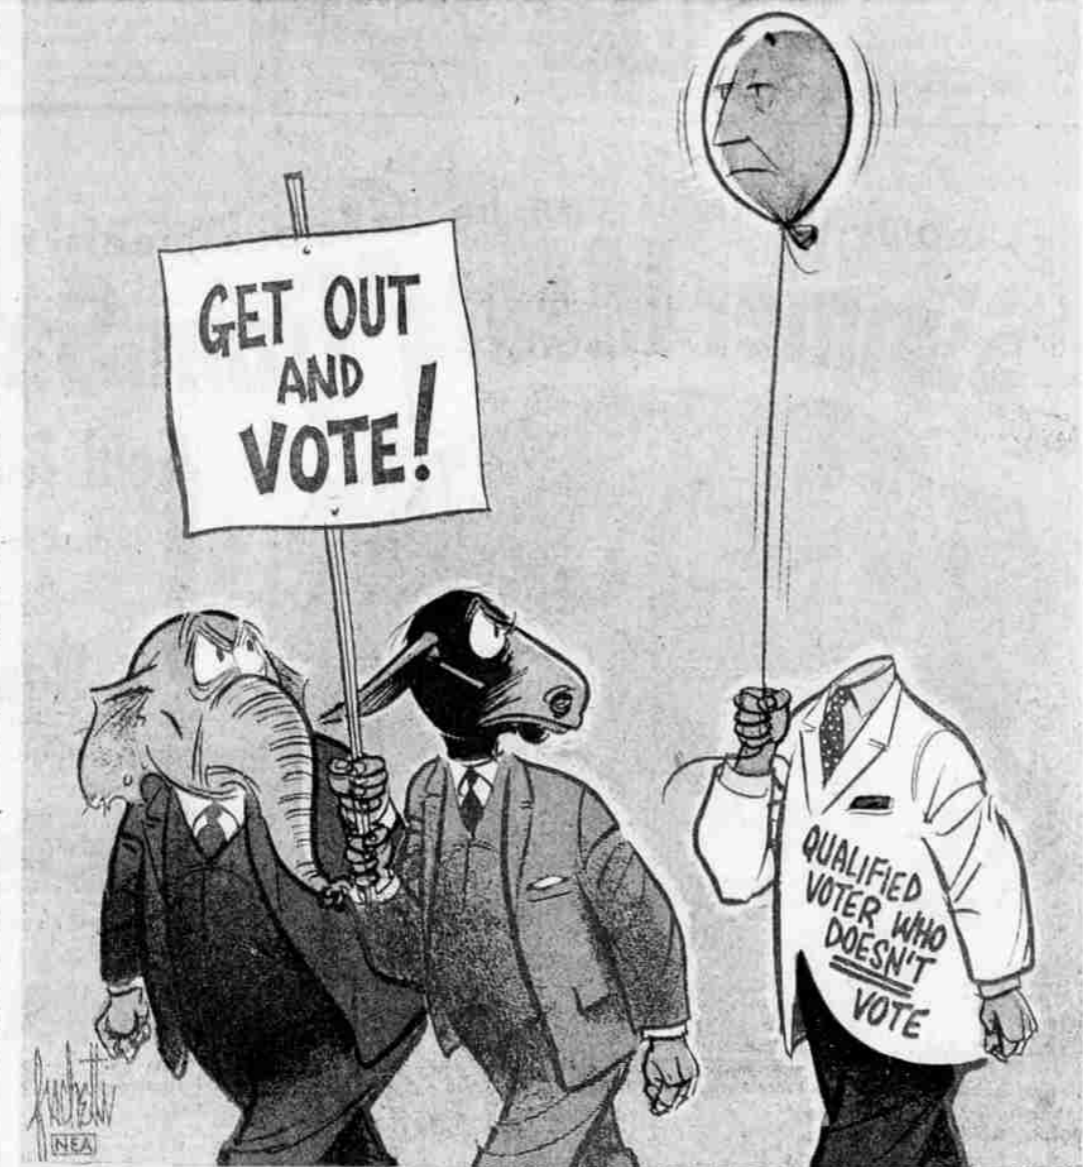

Albuquerque is the home of perhaps the most modern motor hotel in America, the Western Skies. It has glass and chrome lobbies that stretch on and on. It has vast dining rooms and cocktail lounges. It has glittering shops, stocked with the latest in modern merchandise.

Yet it is so laid out that you can drive your car up to the door of ANY room and park it there and carry your own baggage in just as you would at the most modest motel in the land.

New Mexico is indeed the Land of Contrasts.

WASHINGTON (UPI) - The hectic 1960 presidential campaign comes to an end today with both candidates acting as if victory depended on a few more voters who could be converted by handshakes or glances at a TV screen.

Vice President Richard M. Nixon and Sen. John F. Kennedy both undertook man-killing schedules for this election eve before awaiting the verdict from Tuesday's voting.

Public opinion polls indicated Kennedy was ahead but not by a margin big enough to generate overconfidence in Democratic command posts.

Both sides recognized that the religious issue-Kennedy is a Roman Catholic-was one of the big unknowns of the campaign and that it could both help and hurt each candidate.

A record turnout is expected Tuesday. A forecast from Republican National Headquarters puts the figure at about 67 million or within the 65 to 68 million range.

Democrats are confidently claiming Kennedy ahead in all seven Republican, who are jittery about New York and its prize of 45 electoral votes.

After fulfilling a pledge to campaign in all 50 states by flying to Anchorage, Alaska, Sunday, Nixon headed back east in an overnight flight to Madison, Wis.

From a brief stop in Madison, he moves to Detroit, where he will make a four-hour television, unprecedented in a national campaign, to answer questions telephoned to the studio.

After a Chicago stop for another national TV appearance, he flies back to his home state of California. He votes Tuesday at Whittier and receives election returns at a Los Angeles hotel.

The President and Henry Cabot Lodge, GOP vice presidential nominee, campaigning today in New England, will share the TV screen with Nixon.

Kennedy scheduled his final TV appeal from Boston over CBS at 11 p.m. EST.

Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson, Democratic vice presidential nominee, was making his final campaign appearances in his home state of Texas, one of the major battlegrounds of the campaign.

Campaign managers for both candidates are most concerned about seven states with the largest blocs of electoral votes-New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Illinois, Texas and California.

These states combined have 295 of the 289 electoral votes needed by the winner.

Battle Of Census Flares Again Over Local Figure

The "battle of the census" flared anew last week when City Manager G. S. Vergeer was informed by the Oregon State Board of Census that the population of Klamath Falls was back to its old figure of 15,831.

When this preliminary figure was first released earlier this year by the Bureau of the Census, it was protested vigorously by the city and the Klamath County Chamber of Commerce as being erroneous.

The population of the city had been estimated at 20,250, and certified at that figure in 1959 by the state board.

After both the chamber of commerce and other agencies had waged a campaign to round up residents who might not have been counted in the census, the Bureau of the Census came out with a second preliminary report showing the city with a population of 17,765, an increase of 944 over the first figure released.

On Aug. 20, the city manager informed the Oregon State Board of Census of the 944 increase and asked that board to include this figure in the certified population of the city.

October 14, the board replied saying, "An investigation of the data for Klamath Falls contained in the photocopies of the field supervisors' report to Washington, D.C., failed to provide any basis for the correction of 944. As a matter of fact, it became apparent that the 944 had been erroneously added twice during the quick review of the count made
