Cattlemen Pick Cheyne; Ask Brands Inspection

A resolution urging that brand inspection be extended to all changes of ownership in Oregon, except unbranded cattle, was passed at the Klamath County Cattlemen's meeting at the fairgrounds.

The action is a continued association effort to secure a change in the state brand law which has worked a hardship on counties, including Klamath. Under present law only cattle going to slaughter through auction markets or crossing state lines are hand inspected.

The result is to place the costs of all brand inspection on a small percentage of cattle in the state while all cattle receive protection of inspection.

A second resolution approving the multiple use of public lands but opposing the numerous wilderness bills, believed to be detrimental to livestock interests, was also placed on record.

Still a third opposed the taxing of federal leased lands. A three-man committee including Norman Jacob, Leland Pope, Merrill, and John Horton, Poe Valley, was appointed to study the feasibility of an association bill sale of range-ready sires.

Louise Randall, Jack Marshall, Martin Gift, John Lilly and Henry Gerber will also consider the proposal for one or more feeder cattle sales.

Members objected to the visual inspection of cattle moving from Oregon to California and some other states and believe the practice should be discontinued.

Weyerhaeuser Denied Review

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Weyerhaeuser Co. Monday was denied a Supreme Court review of a decision that lithographic production employees at a paper box plant in Middlebury, Ind., constitute an appropriate bargaining unit.

The decision, by the U. S. Circuit Court in Chicago, upheld an order by the National Labor Relations Board.

Oregon Woman Gets Ring Back

SALEM (AP)—The Oregon-Washington Farmers Union will open its annual convention Thursday at Vancouver, Wash. The two-state organization was formed by a merger completed here a year ago.

Firm Says Generating Plan Needed

SEATTLE (AP)—A consulting firm investigating the feasibility of a power inter-tie between California and the Pacific Northwest has proposed construction of a coal-operated generating plant in Washington's Roslyn-Cle Elum area.

The recommendation was contained in a preliminary report by H. Zinder and Associates to the State of California Department of Water Resources Tuesday.

The report, released by the firm's office here, said power needs in Southern California alone provide a ready market to make the proposed inter-tie financially feasible.

Sol E. Schultz of the firm's Seattle office, recommended a plan under which California would buy surplus Northwest power. He also said a steam plant in the Roslyn-Cle Elum area could produce power and transmit it to California at costs California cannot match.

The report said California presently is generating nearly two-thirds of its electric power with thermal systems, while the Northwest is unable to use all its water resources for hydroelectric power production.

The preliminary report estimated the inter-tie transmission system would cost about $200 million. The full report is to be submitted by the end of the year.

Dad Discovers Job Is Useless

CHESTERFIELD, England (UPI)—Jack Cooper, 34, has seven children and he hasn't worked since May, 1957, but this doesn't bother him one bit.

In fact, the unemployed coal mine attendant would be making less money if he went back to work than he now draws.

Cooper explained he received $30.52 a week and free milk from government unemployment benefits. If he went to work, he said he would make only $26.50 a week—with no free milk.

Food costs Cooper and his family $22.40 a week, and rent in their public housing home is $3.64 weekly.

"The National Assistant Board keeps badgering me to get a job," he said. "But why should I? My family will suffer. I have a duty to my family. I'm quite happy at home and doing a bit of rabbit-hunting."

Supreme Court Agrees To Review Decision

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The Supreme Court agreed today to review whether a state can insist that an individual seeking public office must declare his belief in an appeal brought by Roy R. Torcaso, who said he doesn't believe in God, argued that the requirement violates the constitutional ban on establishment of a religion.

By accepting his appeal, the Supreme Court agreed to hear arguments in the case and decide on the opinion of the Maryland Court of Appeals which upheld the state requirement last June 30.
