

Rights Law Stand Still Big Issue

ATLANTA (UPI)—The South's political leaders made it clear today they do not regard the heavy Deep South vote for John F. Kennedy a mandate to slow down their fight against civil rights laws.

But just what their influence will be nationally as an aftermath of the crazy-quilt pattern of the southern vote remains to be seen. Some refused to endorse Kennedy, others held back until the last minute before making a lukewarm endorsement.

Almost all assured southern Democrats that a vote for Kennedy was not a vote for the national Democratic Party's civil rights platform that endorses Negro sit-in demonstrations and calls on each school district to submit a "first step" desegregation plan by 1963.

Sen. Richard B. Russell, D-Ga., leader of the southern bloc in Congress, was out of the country during much of the presidential campaign. He said Wednesday the Southern congressmen "never have failed" to produce an effective plan in the civil rights battles of the past.

Sen. Herman Talmadge, D-Ga., clearly separated his support of Kennedy from the platform and promised to "return control of the public schools" to the states.

Alabama Gov. John Patterson, who got in political trouble at home by an early and enthusiastic endorsement of Kennedy, would say only that current civil rights suits came under the Republican administration. He added that "I won't say the Democrats won't (bring similar suits), but they aren't right here doing it now."

Sen. Harry F. Byrd, D-Va., refused to endorse support or campaign for anyone. Virginia Gov. J. Lindsay Almond backed Kennedy but said he hopes the election will "in no wise obstruct that which is best for Virginia."
