DJAMBI, South Sumatra (UPI) — The commander of Indonesian army forces here sternly told his troops they cannot have more than one wife because "you are in the army now."
 However, the commander's order said the restriction would be waived for any soldier who can get a signed statement from his wife saying she doesn't mind.

Computing Machines May Diagnose Many Major Diseases

By FRANK CAREY
 Associated Press Science Writer
 PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Robot mathematicians—high speed computing machines, that is—may hold the key to spotting candidates for major disease among the healthy, a University of Texas doctor says.
 Dr. Roger J. Williams said susceptibility to ailments ranging from cancer and mental illness to arthritis and alcoholism appears strongly to be related to inherited biochemical weaknesses. "The potentiality exists for the complete exploration of the innate susceptibilities to every disease and to identify in advance those individuals who are vulnerable to each. Recognition of vulnerability and the factors which enter into it, should go a long way in the direction of effective control," Dr. Williams said. "There exist distinctive anatomical, physiological, neurological, biochemical and psychological inheritance and most of innate, measurable factors. Collectively these items constitute a pattern which is distinctive and different for each individual and which can not be handled by traditional statistical methods."
 In other reports:
 1. Dr. L. H. Peterson of the University of Pennsylvania described development of tiny electronic instruments, less than a hundredth of an inch in diameter, which can be inserted in blood vessels of animals, and possibly those of humans, to measure elasticity and other properties of the vessels. He said experiments indicate that scientists may have to re-examine previous views on the mechanism of such things as high blood pressure.
 2. Dr. Irwin I. Oster of Philadelphia's Institute for Cancer Research said experiments with fruit flies indicate that certain chemicals which can cause cancer in man might sometimes produce life-shortening even though they might not produce cancer.

Machine Can Reproduce Book In A Few Minutes

By DICK WEST
 WASHINGTON (UPI) — The U.S. Navy has acquired a new machine which can scan and reproduce about 10 pages of a book in less time than it is taking you to read this paragraph.
 In the time it took me to write the paragraph, the machine could transmit coast-to-coast some 30 pages of the same book. And in the time it took me to think of what I was going to write, it could have copied the entire book. I am not certain that I grasp the significance of all of this, but it certainly seems to prove something. If nothing else, it provides another indication of how rapidly we human beings are falling behind in our race with automation.
 The Navy machine is called for reasons not immediately apparent to me, a "document retriever." I assume it was given this name because it was designed to function as a sort of bureaucratic bird dog.
 Developed by the Hogan Faximile Corp. of New York under sponsorship of the Navy's Bureau of Ships, the "retriever" was publicly demonstrated in the Pentagon last week.
 It was only two weeks ago that I attended a demonstration of the Post Office Department's new "speed mail" system, which I thought would stand as the ultimate in electronic transmission for at least a month.
 And yet I was told that the "retriever" is four times faster than the postal device. Heaven knows what December will bring.
 The Navy said the machine is expected to overcome a serious problem in the distribution of diagrams and plans for ships. It said the blueprints for a big ship, such as an aircraft carrier, weigh as much as 300 tons.
 An aircraft carrier itself weighs about 70,000 tons. So you can see what the Navy is up against.
 Using the "retriever," it would not be necessary to load some poor yeoman down with 300 tons of blueprints and send him off to the shipyard.
 The prints would simply be copied on microfilm and then transmitted to several shipyards simultaneously.
 The "retriever" is capable of transmitting 4,320 square inches of copy every minute. In terms of the printed word, this is equivalent to transmitting a 240-page book every four minutes. Or it can send ten 18-by-24 inch drawings every minute.
 I don't wish to continue to stagger you with comparisons, but more than 500 teletype machines, which usually operate at 60 words a minute, would be needed to keep up with it.
 After explaining all of this at the Pentagon demonstration, a company official turned on the machine and we all rushed over to have a look. Rolling out of it, silently and relentlessly, was a four-page press release, complete with cartoons.

Agreement Turns Back The Clock

TOKYO (AP)—Laotian premier Souvanna Phouma's agreement to set up a coalition government with the pro-Communist Pathet Lao turns back the clock three years.
 Inclusion of Communist members in the royal government represents a return to the "Vietnam agreements" of 1957 which were purported to achieve reunification of Laos.
 On Nov. 30 of that year Prince Souvanna Phouma formed a coalition Cabinet with the Pathet Lao after lengthy negotiations, giving Cabinet posts to his pro-Communist half-brother Prince Souvanna Vong and his deputy.
 The agreements provided for the disbanding of Pathet Lao armed units which controlled the two northern provinces of Phongsaly and Sam Neua except two battalions which were to be integrated into the royal Laotian army.
 Disputes led to the rebellion of one of these battalions in the spring of 1959 and to the Laotian crisis later in the summer.
 Earlier, the government of pro-Western Phoui Sananikone had ousted the two Pathet Lao members from the Cabinet.
 The situation differed then in that the royal government did not have to fight on two fronts. Now, neutralist Souvanna is faced with rebellion from the right wing under former Defense Minister Gen. Phoumi Nosavan which controls an undetermined but important following in the country's armed forces.
