

Kennedy Headquarters Provides Real Excitement For Georgetown

By DICK WEST

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Old Georgetown is a historically modern, pastorally urban community of contrasts located north — but not far enough north — of Hopfenmaler's rendering plant. It is in this fashionably quaint, or quaintly fashionable, residential neighborhood that President-elect John F. Kennedy makes his home.

Old Georgetown has seen many things in its time, but nothing quite like what is going on there now. When Kennedy is in residence, there is a sidewalk encampment of journalists in front of his house. Every now and then, he will appear at the door and toss out the name of a new cabinet member.

Since the new administration is aborning there, I thought you might be interested in reading something about Old Georgetown's history and current mores. So I present herewith a sort of vest pocket travelogue.

In order to understand Old Georgetown at all, you must first understand that it is more than just a residential section of Washington; Old Georgetown is a way of life. Its occupants thrive on adversity.

On an occasional summer day, when the wind is off the Potomac and the rendering plant is diligently rendering, Old Georgetown takes on an aroma of the sort that might be wafted from a yakherder's bedroll.

This pungent perfume drifts over several blocks of wall-to-wall houses with high, drafty ceilings; wind tunnel hallways; bosky basements, and stairways that would intimidate a mountain goat.

Some 15,000 artists, authors, antique dealers, congressmen, diplomats, musicians, politicians, pundits, statesmen and other volatile types pay handsomely for the privilege of coping with this discommodious elegance.

In fact, the preservation of an 18th century atmosphere is Old Georgetown's ruling passion.

Old Georgetown was a thriving river port when the District of Columbia, which now embraces it, was not even a gleam in Pierre l'Enfant's eye. Chartered in 1751 in colonial Maryland, it was named for King George II of England. George Washington of Virginia was a frequent visitor, presaging Kennedy.

For many years, Old Georgetown was little more than a second-rate slum. Then someone decided that its 200-year-old houses had charm. This started a restoration movement which has continued to this day. One of the buildings that was reclaimed for a homestead is barely eight feet wide.

Some real estate dealers regard old Georgetown as an anachronism and seek to refurbish it with supermarkets, housing developments and other 20th century accoutrements. It is against these heretics that the true believers must prevail.

Thus far they have been fairly successful in insulating themselves, but the battle still goes on. I imagine they find comfort in the thought that the next man in the White House will still be with them in spirit.

Physical-Emotional-Mental Line Follows Your Entire Life

By WARD CANNEL

NEW YORK (NEA)—What actually happened up there to U-2 pilot Francis Powers? How did actor James Dean really die? And basically, what about you—should you drive the car tomorrow, or take that airplane, or even get out of bed?

Well, a fellow here with a computer and a ruler says it's all a matter of easily calculated mathematical cycles—the "biorhythm" of your life. He says that when the cycles are at a certain point, watch out.

He says he's no crackpot because figures don't lie and researchers who have checked on the life cycles of thousands of cases are right 80 per cent of the time at least.

For example, the biorhythm chart for actor James Dean shows conclusively that death came on a critical day in his cycles.

And furthermore, U-2 pilot Powers made his fateful flight on a very bad day in his cycles. So did the pilots and co-pilots of several passenger planes that crashed recently. Even 8 out of 10 deaths from normal causes occur on critical biorhythm days according to computations.

The man with the charts and computers is one George Thommen who learned the science of biorhythm during many trips to Europe where it has been practiced in one form or another for generations. It is ridiculously simple, like most gigantic ideas; it works like this:

On the day of birth, we begin three important cycles which will follow all the rest of our lives.

There is the physical cycle (endurance, energy, confidence, etc.) which takes 23 days. There is the 28-day sensibility cycle (nerves, feelings, intuition, creativity, etc.). And there is the 33-day intelligence cycle (memory, logic, ambition, etc.).

Each cycle begins at zero, climbs to its peak, falls to zero and on downward to its full depth, climbs upward to zero and then begins again.

"Each time the cycle crosses zero," Thommen explains, "it is at its critical point. Zero is like a light switch turning a bulb off or on. When two of the three cycles are critical, be very careful."

"This is where natural death occurs, or propensity to accident or the chance of hasty decisions." Now, until quite recently Thommen was an importer by trade.

and a life cyclist by hobby. But when he began to apply the tools of biorhythm to people in the news, he saw at once what a secret had unlocked.

"I knew immediately," he says, "that Ingemar Johansson would have to lose the heavyweight championship to Floyd Patterson as soon as the date of the rematch was announced. Calculations showed that biorhythmically Ingo was either critical or low."

By and by, Thommen sold out his importing business and has now put his assets and acumen to the (oh dear) cycle wheel. The score so far: one thousand charts made and delivered, and several hundred computers sold with demand far exceeding the supply.

At an average of $3 per computer—a three-way, circular slide rule—Thommen may have a good thing going. And if he can just convince the air lines, football coaches, doctors or marriage counselors that they need master computers for assigning pilots or players, helping patients or clients—why there's no telling how life in the U.S. will be changed.

This reporter, for example, faced with double-critical cycles by Thommen's computations, has already asked for next Friday off.

Muscle Champ Finds Demand Slim For Him

SACRAMENTO (UPI)—Charles H. Spies became Mr. Universe two months ago by displaying more muscles than 41 other men at an international contest in Montreal, Canada.

After packing his trophy and bathing suit, he returned home at once to await fortune's call. There had been no cash prize.

But the talent scouts and promoters have yet to arrive. No one has asked him to make a screen test, endorse a product, appear on national television, or write a book.

Spies begrudges nothing to the young ladies who win fame and profit in a bathing suit. He wishes, however, that some of America's interest in bodies beautiful would fasten on him.

"People just seem to like women better than men," he said.

Actually, Spies has a job—sort of. He's manager of a Sacramento health studio that burned down several weeks ago.

Spies, 28, has been in the health studio business most of his adult life and formerly operated his own place in his home town of Modesto.

Khrushchev Is Winner At Red Summit Meeting

MOSCOW (AP) — The world

Communist movement publicly closed ranks today to support Soviet Premier Khrushchev's thesis that communism can triumph without nuclear war. Khrushchev thus won a victory at last month's Communist summit meeting.

Communist China joined 80 other Communist parties in endorsing a manifesto that seemed to make clear Khrushchev and his line of peaceful coexistence retain control of world communism's direction—at least for the present.

"War is not fatally inevitable. The Communist parties regard the fight for peace as their prime task," said a declaration spread across 3½ pages in Pravda.

This is what Khrushchev has insisted on since the 20th Soviet Communist party congress in 1956 which has won later endorsements from the Communist movement.

But this time he won a stamp of approval only after an embattled Communist summit meeting that opened in the Kremlin Nov. 9—the day after the U.S. elections—and continued for 21 days. The agreement that emerged, in public at least, took 20,000 words. But no one could tell how permanent was the ink in which it was written.

Communist China has held that thesis with the capitalist world is inevitable. This was the major difference with the Kremlin in the larger question of how the Communists should advance their cause—by a belligerent posture toward the West and encouragement of violent revolution, or by negotiation with the capitalists while communism takes over gradually.

(Newspapers in London saw the manifesto as a Communist go-ahead for Khrushchev to pursue new negotiations with the West after the failure of the May summit meeting.)

Communism, said the manifesto, is bound to win in peace "by the force of its example."

It warned that "war is a constant companion of capitalism" but said "real forces have appeared that are capable of foiling its plans of aggression."

The manifesto called on Communist parties to unite with other like-minded groups in popular fronts, instead of continuing the Communist fight alone.

"Today in a number of capitalist countries the working class, headed by its vanguard (the Communist party), has the opportunity to unite a majority of the people, win state power without civil war and ensure the transfer of the basic means of production to the hands of the people," the manifesto said.

But it added that the possibility of "non-peacful transition to socialism should be borne in mind" and that the form of the struggle depended on the "resistance put up by the reactionary circles."

The declaration also renewed communism's approval of non-Communist national liberation movements in colonial and underdeveloped countries.

This has been official Soviet policy—for instance in India where the Soviet Union attempts to maintain strong friendship with Prime Minister Nehru's government. But some Communists have insisted that Communists should be channeled to Communist parties no matter how remote their immediate chances of victory.

(Peiping has been one of those wanting to back Communists wherever they are. Among those reported supporting the Chinese Reds at the summit meeting were Latin-American Communist parties who are for the most part small and need outside help.)
