Shasta Hunter Gets Nothing In Damage Suit

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — A hunter was denied damages Friday for injuries suffered when a timber gave way in a bridge in Mt. Shasta National Forest, dumping him into a stream below.

The hunter was Renato Chinca, 40, a Mt. Shasta restaurant operator, who had asked $120,000 in U.S. District Court suit. He suffered multiple fractures in the accident.

Judge Michael J. Roche ruled that the government had no liability in the case, noting that "every visible aspect of the construction of the bridge gave warning of the risks involved."

"The plaintiff, a resident of the area and familiar with the forest, voluntarily assumed these risks when he walked out onto the bridge," Roche said.

Asst. U.S. Atty. Frederick J. Woelfen had argued that the legal theories asserted by Chinca in the case would so much expand the government's liability as to require it to blow up hundreds of bridges in the area.

Punch Card Balloting Is Studied

SALEM (AP) — Secretary of State Howell Appling Jr. said Saturday he has been studying a program to use punch card election ballots that would be counted electronically.

He said he would ask the legislature for money to continue the study and to develop the equipment for counting. He said he is convinced that the mounting cost of elections could be greatly reduced.

The ballots would be punched in the precincts, but would be counted at central counting places, such as at county clerks' offices.

Appling said his proposed system has some bugs in it, but that after they are worked out, it would be better than any present system of voting machines.

If the legislature gives him the money, an engineering firm would design the equipment. He hopes that the machines would be built in Oregon.

He hopes he could have the equipment developed by the 1963 legislature.

"She apparently had not been harmed," Lakeville Police Chief Robert Bernard said. "In fact, she told us Thurlow treated her and the youngsters pretty well. She said she managed to shove him out of the car near Erie because he was intoxicated."

Chief Bernard immediately notified Pennsylvania State Police at the Girard barracks near Erie. It then was learned that a man fitting Thurlow's description had been picked up for disorderly conduct. Police said he was found here in a drunken stupor. Additional charges of transporting a stolen vehicle across state lines and two counts of check forgery were lodged against him since his arrest.

Chief Bernard in Lakeville said the woman told him she and the children had been forced to ride with Thurlow since Dec. 7. She said the wild ordeal started after she had left her husband, Richard Preston Maskell, in Sanford, Maine.

The woman told police she had hired Thurlow to drive her and her children from their home in Sanford to Oakland, Calif. After a few days in Oakland she told Thurlow she wanted to return home.

But on the return trip Thurlow took a devious route over her protests, she said.

Edward Albrecht, 24, an ex-Marine from Lakefield, Minn., was questioned after police found his wife's body in a storage trunk which had been shipped to Chicago.

The coroner's office in Chicago reported Saturday that fingerprints and dental chisels had confirmed the body was that of Ann Albrecht, 24, Kyrin V. Phelan, chief investigator, said the cause of death had not been determined.

Sheriff Harry Tordsen said Albrecht told him he had taken an overdose of sleeping tablets because he was concerned about his wife. Albrecht was found unconscious in his mother's farm home near Lakefield about 11:30 p.m. Friday.

Tordsen said he had talked to Albrecht only briefly in a Jackson hospital shortly before noon, and added that he would be questioned further Saturday in the presence of County Attorney Harvey Holtan.

Cargo Pilots Refuse To Make Laos Flights

VANG-VIENG, Laos (UPI) — American cargo pilots refused to make supply flights to the Laotian army Saturday, bogging down a government offensive, because they said the airstrip here was inadequate.

The offensive was aimed at wresting the Luang Prabang-Vientiane highway from rebel control.

American pilots flying chartered supply planes refused to make the flights to Vang Vieng airport because they said the runway was so short they could carry only one ton of cargo on each flight.

Swept Northward
A fast-moving Laotian task force — spearheaded by an armored column — had swept northward about 80 miles from the capital at Vientiane, splitting pro-Communist forces and retaking a number of strategic points.

Lack of food supplies and gasoline slowed the advance to a crawl Saturday.

Reports reaching Vientiane said Laotian troops had fallen back 12 miles from the important road junction at Sala Pou Kyoun on the road to Luang Prabang. This is the point where the road to the royal capital of Luang Prabang forks off toward Red-held Xieng Khouang.

Want Runway Lengthened
The halting of the supply flights stunned the task force commander, Col. Oudone Sananikone, who said his unit's efforts to link up with government forces further north would be considerably delayed. Oudone had planned to join forces with army units coming down from Luang Prabang at the Sala Pou Khoum Road junction, which was reported to be in rebel hands.

Informed sources in Vientiane told UPI correspondent Arthur Dommen the Laotian army was moving artillery down from Luang Prabang to reinforce the beleaguered troops of Colonel Oudone.

The pilot of a DC3 freighter which arrived here Friday said there would be no more flights until the Laotian army lengthened the short runway.
