

Husband Blasts In Living Room

By ANN LANDERS

Dear Ann Landers: My wife put your column under my coffee cup this morning. We had such a violent argument on account of you that I missed my bus.

So you don't think women should be asked to pluck the pheasant or clean the fish? And exactly what is a wife supposed to do these days?

The modern woman is a self-centered, painted doll, a pleasure-seeking parasite. She was first fashioned out of Adam's rib—a shapeless nothing, then she evolved into a middle-aged, coqueted, comfort-loving housewife whose major function is to trick some male into supporting her.

Your daily column is filled with examples of how nice, quiet men are duped by The Modern Day Witch—the Adorable-Clothes-Horse. And now you come along and say it's enough that she lets him enjoy the pleasures of hunting and fishing—that she should not be asked to pluck the duck or scale the fish. Perish the thought that a wife should split a nail or worse yet, her little bending over to do a humble labor.

Modern woman is the invention of the devil. And you can quote me—SOCRATES' UNCLE

Dear Uncle: Every now and then a rock is moved and something like you crawls out.

Thanks for that glowing testimonial for American womanhood. And how would you like your hemlock, Sir, one lump or two?

Dear Ann Landers: I'm going with a girl who is five years younger than I am. (She's 18.) Maybe this has something to do with the problem. Please tell me if I am wrong or if she is.

Rosalie says she wants me to be more affectionate in front of her friends and relatives. She claims I'm too reserved and that if I really loved her I wouldn't be ashamed to show it. I refuse to put my arms around her and kiss her when people are present. It isn't my nature to be gushy.

She says it makes a girl feel good to be fussed over by her sweetheart and that there's nothing wrong with it if two people are sincere. I reminded her that the two couples in our crowd who were the most love-dovey were married and divorced the same year. She said to write to you—SAM

Dear Sam: Mauling, pawing and kissing in the presence of others is not proof of love—it's just poor taste. Only the insecure mush it up to give the illusion that they're so in love they can't keep their hands off each other. People prove their love by treating one another with consideration and kindness, not by putting on public performances.

Dear Ann Landers: You said in a column not long ago that a boy's mother should not put bleach in the rinse water when she washes his hair. I think you're a nut. It so happens that I am a boy 17 and I put bleach in the water myself.

My hair is a golden blond now instead of a dull brown. The girls call me Honeybear and Golden Boy. Everyone likes it—especially me. So what's wrong with it?—17 VOLUME PEROXIDE

Dear 17 Volume: There's no law against a boy bleaching his hair, but it seems to me you could do something better with your time.

P.S. What do the BOYS call you?

Are you tempted to smoke because the crowd does? If so, send for Ann Landers' booklet, "Teenage Smoking," enclosing with your request 10 cents in coin and a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope.

Ann Landers will be glad to help you with your problems. Send them to her in care of this newspaper enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Dorris PO Plans Get Approval

DORRIS—Regional Post Office Department headquarters in San Francisco have notified Marshall Hamilton that his offer to build a structure to house a new Dorris post office has been accepted.

Hamilton has plans to erect the building on land he and his wife own on the northeast corner of Third and Oregon streets.

The building, already under construction, will measure 30 feet by 40 feet and will provide 1,200 square feet of floor space. Walls will be of pumice brick. The Third Street side—the front of the building—will be faced with buff-colored tile.

Hamilton said plans call for plate glass windows and a three by seven-foot glass door in front. The lobby will be to the left of the door. Postal windows and the mail box lobby will be to the right. The postal department will install barred windows, cabinet work and boxes, Hamilton said.

The building will cost about $10,000. If weather is favorable, it should be completed in about two months, he stated.

Postmistress Nina Clark and her assistants will work in a large air conditioned room complete with rest room and drinking fountain.

A concrete mail loading platform will connect directly to the work room. The office will be heated with gas. Parking space will be provided on the Oregon Street side and a full-width concrete sidewalk will extend to the corner of Third and Oregon streets.

Peak Of Bill Deluge Near In Legislature

By REP. GEORGE FLITCRAFT Although it would be impossible to describe any day during the legislative session as a "typical" day with regard to legislation which is introduced, we all know that a considerable amount of new material will be delivered to our desks each morning.

For example, a package of printed material was delivered to my desk recently which included exactly 41 bills, joint resolutions and memorials.

All of the legislators devote some portion of the day reading this material; however, too much time cannot be spent studying these measures since many of them will never arrive on the floor for action.

This particular package contained a wide variety of measures including a resolution which would set up an interim committee to study the problem of sexual criminals, a House joint memorial asking Congress to create "uniform time" in the United States, a bill which would give Medford rights to the waters of Big Butte Creek in Jackson County, a bill which would limit all legislative sessions to 90 days, and a bill to appropriate funds to operate the state Department of Agriculture, as well as numerous other measures.

We are now approaching the peak period for bills to be introduced. The rules of this session of the legislature provide that bills cannot be introduced in either the House or the Senate after the 35th day. The 35th day falls on a Sunday, and we actually have until Feb. 13. This means that the bulk of the legislation which will eventually be introduced is now being drafted.

In addition to the regular morning sessions of the House and Senate and the committee work to which each of us is assigned, letters from home take a certain amount of our time.

As I have said before, I earnestly solicit letters and postal cards from home. Opinions from those affected by legislation are important to me. Representatives and senators who truly want to represent the people who sent them to the legislature all feel the same way.

You will continue to hear talk about reapportionment of the legislature in the days ahead. Secretary of State Howell Applegate, who will be charged with the responsibility for conducting the reapportionment if the legislature does not come up with a plan by July 1, has said that the "Oregon Constitution is very specific and explicit" as to what is to be done with regard to reapportionment.

As Applegate sees it, "there are very few options." In his words, "the constitution is so clear on this matter it is certain that the final reapportionment plan will provide equal representation."

He pointed out the interesting fact that if the legislature or secretary of state suggested a plan which does not give "equal representation," a request by a "single elector" would send the entire matter to the supreme court for reconsideration. In that event the supreme court would come up with a final plan.

Applegate does not believe that he will eventually be asked to make the final reapportionment decisions. He said that development of a deadlock which would carry the legislature beyond the "deadline" is about the only eventuality which would shift responsibility to his office. He does not expect this to happen.

Many legislators, including myself, are receiving mail concerning House Bill 1097 which would change the age requirements for children starting school. Like most things that affect a large number of people, this bill is receiving more than its share of attention. The bill, if passed in its present form, would require a child to be 6 years of age on or before July 1 in order to attend school the following September. Indications are that most of the opposition comes from parents, while many educators favor the proposed change.

House Bill 1242, which was introduced last Friday, sets up the machinery to provide for elections to determine if alcoholic liquors should be prohibited in counties or cities. This is a local option plan as used in some states.

House Bill 1011 received a "do pass" recommendation from the House Tax Committee. This raises the bonding limits of the Oregon System of Higher Education from 24 million dollars to 34 million dollars for the construction of dormitories and student facilities at several of the state institutions of higher education. This concurs with the action taken by the voters at the last general election.

I would like to call your attention to House Bill 1010 commonly known as the Net Business Receipts Tax. This measure repeals the personal property tax on inventories and provides a 1.5 per cent tax on net business income. On the surface this appears reasonably simple; however, there are many facets incorporated in this bill that could lead to difficulties. This bill is scheduled for a public hearing at the state Capitol Building, Feb. 29 at 1 p.m.

Last Wednesday a hearing was held on the proposed cigarette tax. Much testimony was heard pro and con, but the meeting finally developed into a springboard for political repartee, and as of this date, nothing has been decided.

The past week has seemed somewhat like "old home week." Following is a list of some of the sung and unsung workers for the betterment of Klamath County:

Vince Havlina, Ed McCulley, Jim Ottman, Ray L. Roberts, John A. Shori, Joe Keller, William Cunningham, Ben Johnson, Cecil Hunt, Murel Long, John L. Stewart, Clyde Woolen, Lawrence Slater, County Judge Bob Walker, Mayor Bob Ventch, Jack Kalinski, Bob Puckett, Reg McLaren, Dave Card, Judge Hal Coe and Mr. and Mrs. Lowell Jones. All of these people have been in Salem helping us do a better job.

Try Thinking As Foreigner

By LESLIE J. NASON, Ed.D., With HARRY KERNS

Now let's talk about how to read literary works and foreign languages.

Literature is written to entertain. It seems a shame to take it out of the field of entertainment and place it under the head of Scholarship—with a capital S. But that is what comma-hunting English professors have done with it.

Since this is the situation, it only makes good sense to put some system into the analytical reading of literary works. You can at least enjoy making a good grade.

To satisfy an English professor's exacting requirements, you must think of a great deal more than merely how good the story is. Here are some questions to ask yourself when you are reading a novel, a play, a short story.

- 1. What is the theme? 2. What is the setting? 3. Who is the central character, and how does his life change in the course of the work? 4. Is the dialogue realistic? 5. What is the turning point of the story? 6. Where is the climax—the point where a final decisive action is taken? 7. Is there a particularly vivid description? 8. Does the author have mannerisms that distinguish his style? 9. English professors are a shifty lot. However, try to find out what you are supposed to learn from your reading under a certain professor. You may be able to get a ray of intelligence from tests given to previous classes. In any event, you'll find out when he gives your first quiz. Take the hint and study the sort of thing he is interested in.

Pointers on Languages Beyond that, keep in mind these points: 1. While reading a literary work keep the author's name and the title of the book in the background of your thinking space. 2. Think of the characters as the inventions of the author. Use the author's name and the character's name in the same thought. "Shakespeare did a good job with Othello." "Dickens created an appealing character in Oliver Twist."

3. Picture situations and scenes. And identify all of these things with the author, using both his name and the name of the story. Before doing the things we have suggested here, we suggest that you do one preliminary thing: Read the book just for the fun of it.

Studying a modern language is something requiring still different techniques.

A lot depends on the way you prepare to study.

If the material to be read is part of an exercise in a textbook, it probably involves new vocabulary, foreign words you never saw before. You should study the vocabulary before trying to read the lesson.

But also a foreign language requires an entirely new point of view.

For real success you must quit thinking in English and think in that foreign language. Do not merely translate from the foreign language. If it's French, you must become a Frenchman; if German, a German; if Russian, a Russian—but do not fear it is only make a believe, and you will not be investigated by a congressional committee.

Suggested steps for vocabulary study: 1. Each word in the vocabulary should be pronounced and studied.

2. If the first reading did not produce clear understanding, she was to glance through the material, picking out unfamiliar words.

3. She was to give each of these words the thorough thought process suggested for vocabulary study.

4. Then she was to read a second time for understanding.

5. At points where written translations were required, she was to translate without referring to previous work.

Jane tried it this way, with the excellent results you can expect when you apply simple, commonsense principles in solving a problem. Jane started getting "As." Jane learned to learn.

Obviously, there is a bit more to the business of reading than being able to devour rapidly page after page of print. Good reading is an organized undertaking requiring preparation, purpose, discipline and drill.

(Tomorrow: Better grades through better handwriting.)

2. Keep the word in mind long enough to thoroughly understand it.

3. Call up the appropriate picture. If the word means "chair," bring up a mental picture of a chair, not just the word chair.

4. Look for associations of words, and use each new word in at least one pattern of words. Learn the much-used pattern of words and idioms whenever you can. For example, a foreigner studying English would use as often as possible such expressions as, "Thank you very much," "You are welcome," "What time is it please?" and "Turn right at the next corner."

Try Mental Pictures This approach will help you not merely today but in your future use of the language. If you concern yourself primarily with translating today's exercise, you may fall into the trap of simply memorizing equivalent words.

You can get the current assignment that way, perhaps, but the words won't stick—and so, what do you do on exam day?

Jane had trouble with high school French. She was able to do the daily translations but got low grades on tests. Her memory for vocabulary held water for two or three weeks at the most. Each assignment required endless reference to the French-English dictionary.

We suggested that she use the mental picture technique, try thinking in French, and attempt her reading in a new way:

1. She was to stop at the end of each page or paragraph and recite the meaning to herself.

Relief Notice Proposed SALEM (AP)—Rep. Edward F. Fadeley, D-Eugene, today announced a bill to require that notices be sent relatives of persons applying for welfare assistance. The notices would tell the relatives they might later be liable to repay to the state welfare Commission money given in welfare payments. Fadeley said that as a lawyer he often has persons come to him saying they suddenly find they owe the state money under the relative responsibility law. These persons, he said, find they are unable to pay the money without considerable effort because they had no advance knowledge, he said. This bill would prevent relatives from feeling they have been unjustly treated when asked for large sums of money to cover several years responsibility, he said. It also would save welfare funds because it would encourage members of the family to make arrangements in advance to care for needy members of their families, he said.

Dog And Thefts On Police List

A lost dog and two thefts were among the matters investigated by the city police Wednesday.

Mrs. Gary Downing, 4410 Crosby Street, said her Pekinese dog had wandered from home. The dog is brown and white and answers to the name "Puggy."

Charles Valdez, 1501 Canny Street, said two floor mats were taken from his car while it was parked at the Tower Theater. The mats were worth $10, he said.

Robert Ernst, 203 High Street, reported the possible theft of some coffee from a truck he was driving. The truck was parked on Second Street near his house.

James M. Lee, Olympia Apartments, said someone broke out the right wing window of his car.
