

She's Crazy About Karting

Housewife Dorothy Devlin likes speed—and gets her full share in a hunk of pipe and power

Most wives get enough driving from shopping trips, but Dorothy likes to race; hubby, too.

DOROTHY DEVLIN is a housewife in Ashland, N.C., who loves speed and pursues it on the ground with her midget racing car and in the air with her own plane. She has the full encouragement of her husband, former football star Tom Devlin, himself a sports-car enthusiast and pilot.

Newest of Dorothy's enthusiasms is karting, a craze which is catching on throughout the U.S. For a minimum of $100, youngsters build their own go-karts out of plumbers' pipe, four wheels, and a motor adapted from a chain saw. Stock models with padded seats and other gadgets may run to $500. Top speed is seldom more than 40 mph, but because the seat is only four inches off the ground, the illusion of speed is almost fantastic.

The Devlins, like many other families, pile their racers into the auto trunk, and drive to local meets to compete with friends and neighbors in karting races. So far, she hasn't flown her plane to a race, but the idea appeals to her.

After a spin around the track, the Devlins have their go-kart checked by a mechanic (left).
