Answers To Coinword Puzzle Contest Explained For Contestants

Although there were over 2,000 entries in the Coinword Puzzle contest last week, no entry was correct.

This week the grand prize in the contest moves to $125, in addition to special prizes by the sponsors of the puzzle.

To enable those who entered the contest to check their entries of last week, we print a copy of the correct puzzle, and an explanation of the words used.

(No explanations are given for words having no possible alternatives.)

"DENNIS THE MENACE"

*DID YOU HEAR THAT, MOM? I JUST SHOWED JOEY HOW TO POP A PAPER BAG!*

Explanations Across

1. If you find someone HUMPING over work papers on his desk, you might hesitate to disturb him. He is leaning over, in deep concentration, in a round-shouldered position, too absorbed to wish to be interrupted. If he's HUMMING over his work, he is giving it only part of his attention.

6. A HAM on a wave-length may interfere with radio reception. An amateur radio operator is supposed to stick to his assigned wave-length. If he starts fooling around where he doesn't belong, he can cause trouble. A JAM on a radio wave-length is regularly practiced by Iron Curtain countries to keep real news from coming through, and it DOES — not MAY — interfere with radio reception.

11. Police keep curious crowds away from an area where there is a dangerous BLAST; there may be another explosion. It's hardly necessary for police to keep crowds away from a dangerous BEAST — nobody is THAT curious.

17. In the styles of a century ago, women could be HIPPY and eat all they wanted. HIPS were in style, but so were very tight corsets to pull in the waistline, and it's not likely that women were very HAPPY, or even comfortable, wearing them!

20. A biscuit that's FOOD for a dog is poor fare for humans. Since it has various ingredients that are wholesome, it might be GOOD for humans as well as dogs, but it's pretty unpalatable eating for people.

23. With patience, a hothead may learn to CURB his temper. A hothead instinctively gets angry at the least offense, and it may be impossible for him to CURE this tendency, but with self-control and determination he can learn to keep it in check.

24. An executive who's bored with his job is likely to get TIRED; almost anyone finds a job extra fatiguing if he isn't interested in it. An executive may have a privileged position in the firm, through seniority or part ownership, that prevents his being FIRED.

27. Slanderous remarks often winds up as a CASE for action in court. As the "starting point of action," such remarks are the BASE, but they "wind up" as a CASE, as a legal suit is called.

30. Unless a man is pretty HANDY, he wouldn't be wanted on a jungle expedition. No matter how HARDY he is — capable of enduring hardship — he would be a drag on the party unless he has some sort of skill with his hands and can pitch in and help in setting up camp, etc.

Explanations Down

1. A housewife is less likely to be bored if she has an interesting HUBBY. A housewife, particularly if she has children, almost invariably is too busy for a HOBBY (an occupation pursued for recreation).

2. A life filled with troubles tends to make some people MOAN to those around them. This is the type of person who feels sorry for himself and wants sympathy from all his friends. A troubled life has no real relevance to being MEAN — unkind or vicious — to others.

5. The clean-up squad is usually very busy after a big GAME, with bottles, paper cups, cigarette stubs, etc., to be swept up. The whole sentence is an understatement for a big GALE, when EVERYBODY — not just a clean-up squad — IS busy cleaning up, not just USUALLY is busy.

8. MOVING great sections of turf is very tiring work. Nowadays, with electric mowers (including those that the operator rides on) MOWING — cutting the grass — often requires little effort, but it's a heavy job to dig up sections of turf and transplant them for sod, elsewhere.

12. If she's mopping the floor, Mom is naturally annoyed if the kids rush across it while it's still SOPPY (soaking wet). If it's still SOAPY, she hasn't finished the job and their footprints are rinsed away along with the soap.

13. A gossip becomes unduly CURIOUS when a secret is being kept from her. The fact that it is a secret lends the story added importance to someone who can't bear not knowing the "inside" on everything. It would be hard, even for a gossip, to be FURIOUS about being left out on something that was none of his — or her — business.

15. The classroom teacher has a hard time reaching the mind of a SLY child. He is furtive, and one never knows what he is thinking. A SHY child is too timid to express his feelings, but an understanding teacher, by putting him at ease, can gradually win a response from him.

17. An eager gardener is constantly HOEING to get rid of weeds; even when things are growing, he must keep the soil cleared between the rows. An "eager" gardener knows he can't get rid of weeds just by HOPING they will disappear.

18. A vain girl takes a lot of time before the mirror to PONDER her face. Even though done with great care, it can't take long to POWDER one's face; the vain girl studies herself in the mirror, and considers how to make the most of her good features, whether to use more makeup or less, etc.
