Richard Nixon's Political Future Remains Doubtful

WASHINGTON (AP)—The only thing clear about Richard M. Nixon's political future is that it isn't clear at all, even to him.

The former vice president made a statement to Republicans which has been interpreted as meaning he won't run for governor in California in 1962.

There is one simple rule for deciding when a politician will not run for office. That's when he says: "I will not be a candidate under any circumstances."

Nixon's didn't go that far in telling California Republicans he will not be Democratic Gov. Edmund G. Brown's opponent in 1962.

What he said was: "I am not a candidate. I have no intention to be a candidate or institute a draft."

Having no intention now and being persuaded later to run are not the same thing. And, while he said he would not start a move to draft him, he didn't say he would turn down a draft if someone else started it.

And he was even less precise about his ideas on running for the presidency again in 1964 or 1968, and understandably so.

The New York Times reported he told confidants he had no plans at present to run for the White House again.

But he conceded, the Times said, that his making a second try was not beyond the realm of possibility.

There is a simple interpretation for this: Right now he's not sure of his prospects in 1964, so he's not sticking his neck out.

It's questionable that he will be in a position to do any picking or choosing in 1964 for he may be in the political discard by then.

He indicated in California he may take an active leadership role in the party. As the 1960 defeated presidential candidate he is the so-called titular head of the party anyway. That could and may become an empty title.

When he spoke of his leadership he qualified it by saying he'd lead only "to the extent that fellow members of my party may desire me to do so."

Already there's some question about how welcome his leadership is.

Sen. Barry Goldwater of Arizona, most vigorous spokesman for the Republicans' extreme right wing, apparently isn't willing to let Nixon call the shots just because he's supposed to be the leader.

He said if Nixon wants to be a power in the party he should run for something. Goldwater added: "Until he gets elected to some position, he's just going to be a Republican lawyer."

If Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller of New York is reelected next year he will be in a much better position to win the presidential nomination in 1964.

So, before Nixon has had time to look around, he's been told in effect: "Anything you get, you'll have to fight for."

Rockefeller, Nixon's only real rival in 1960, will, if reelected governor of New York next year, be in a prime spot to grab for the big prize in 1964.

In one election after another, with only a couple of exceptions in the past two decades, voters have rejected the Republicans' conservatism.

Judging from this past experience the Democrats figure to win again in 1962 and 1964 unless the Kennedy administration turns out dismally or unless the Republicans get more progressive.

And Rockefeller, not Nixon, represents the progressive wing of the party.
