Far East Trade Seen Key To Power Balance

PORTLAND (AP)—The balance of power in the Far East depends on Japanese-United States trade, Japanese Ambassador Koichiro Asakai said today.

The U.S. assistant secretary of state, Walter P. McCaughy, agreed. He said the United States wants to stimulate trading.

"Japan is the only nation in East Asia which is theoretically capable of developing sufficient political and economic, if not military power, to serve as a counter-balance to communism in Asia," he said in a speech prepared for delivery at the sixth Japan-American Conference of Mayors and Chamber of Commerce Presidents.

Japan's economy must increase at least 7 per cent a year to support its growing population, the ambassador said.

"To support this expansion, Japan must import additional quantities of many industrial raw materials, capital goods and advanced technology. We can pay for these only by expanding our exports. I hardly need to say that the very question of Japan's national existence, to say nothing of her strategic position in the Free World, is in the balance," he said.

"It is a matter of deep concern to the Japanese people to note these days in the United States a trend toward protectionism and endeavor on the part of segments of American industry to restrict Japanese imports," Asakai said.

He warned that there are forces who want to push Japan into the Sino-Soviet bloc, and added: "We do not ask for your economic aid. All we need is a fair opportunity to trade with the free countries, particularly the United States."

The speech came at the opening session of the conference, attended by more than 80 Japanese and 150 American officials. The conference will continue through Thursday with more talks on trade, port and civic problems on both sides of the Pacific.

He said the United States has a great interest in seeing that Japan expands its markets on reasonable terms in the United States and elsewhere.

He added that at the same time, Japan has an obligation to "dismantle as rapidly as possible the remaining quantitative controls over imports into Japan."

McCaughy said that the U.S. stake in Japan's effort to double its national income within 10 years is almost as great as that of Japan itself.

"We Americans understand that Japan can not succeed in this undertaking unless she can achieve success on reasonable terms to a fair share of the market in the United States and elsewhere in the free world," he said.

He added, however, that the U.S. government does not mean to encourage any mass invasion of America by Japanese products, nor has it any intention of driving American manufacturers out of business.

McCaughy said partnership between the United States and Japan will "become one of the most steadfast foundations of progress, friendship and peace in the world."

Their security relationship, he said, is only part of the general partnership between the two countries, based on common objectives "in the unfinished revolution for a better world."

McCaughy said the consultations between the two countries will continue. He called attention to the November meeting of the new U.S.-Japan Committee of Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said the Joint Economic Committee, composed of cabinet-level members, will view the whole range of trade and economic relations, will plan for their future, and seek to iron out any rough spots as they develop.

He also called attention to new joint committees on cultural matters and scientific exchange which have been set up between the two nations.

Guests Afflicted By Child's Talent

By ANN LANDERS. Dear Ann Landers: Some close friends have a lovely home. We enjoy their company but it's gotten to the point that we hate to go over there because of the way they inflict their children on the guests.

Here's the routine: No sooner do we arrive than the 10-year-old has to recite the Gettysburg address plus three or four elocution pieces. Then the 8-year-old plays a 20-minute piano program. The 6-year-old is "in the wings" in her ballet costume and we must watch The Dance of the Pussycats and her version of The Swan.

Last night it was 10 o'clock before they got the kids off stage so the adults could visit. My husband says he's not going to suffer through another such evening. I know we'll be invited again soon. What shall I say? --ENOUGHISVILLE

Dear Enoughsville: If they are close friends you should be able to level with the hostess. If you do, it will be a good test of the friendship. If they value your company they'll respect your husband's point of view and stash the kids before you arrive. If not, they'll interpret your candor as an insult and you won't be invited again.

Dear Ann: Our son is a medical student who is going to school four quarters a year so he won't "waste any time."

He's an excellent scholar, hard-working and serious. He appreciates the sacrifices his father and I have made so he can enter this wonderful profession.

His girl friend has been making his life miserable. She is always mad at him because he can see her only two evenings a week and on Sunday afternoons. He becomes depressed because she bawls him out all the time for being such a bookworm. I'm afraid her nagging will interfere with his studies unless someone gives her a better understanding of what a young man must go through to become a doctor.

Do you think it would help if I phoned her and set her straight? I would be very nice and merely explain the facts. --MED STUDENT'S MOM

Dear Mom: Keep your ear out of those forbidden waters. When your son has had a gullet-full of his girl's selfish demands he'll give her the gate. Anything you say or do would be considered meddling, and he'd resent it.

Dear Ann Landers: As an officer of an insurance company I'd like to comment on a recent column. It involved a woman who confided to a friend that she planned to collect a sizable amount on a phony injury. You told her the insurance companies catch up with a surprising number of fakers and that the results can be humiliating. I'd like to add this: Honest citizens have to pay dearly for the detective work required to catch up with the chiselers. These costly investigations are reflected in the inflated rates of insurance policies for everyone.

I've talked to a good many men and women who have been caught faking claims. Strangely enough they wouldn't dream of short-changing the paper boy or putting an extra orange in the sack, but when dealing with an insurance company the rationalization is "Why not soak 'em? The company is rich." --HARTFORD, CONN.

Confidential to Man-Hater, TOO: I don't know about you, but you're wrong about me. I'm not a man-hater, in fact I like men. We have them right in our own family.

Ann Landers will be glad to help you with your problems. Send them to her in care of this newspaper enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Mon' Wallgren, 3-Way Public Servant, Dies

OLYMPIA (AP)—Mon C. Wallgren, one of the few men in American history to serve as congressman, U.S. senator and governor, died Monday at the age of 70.

Death came in an Olympia hospital where he had been confined since July 8 when he was injured in a highway accident that broke bones in both his legs and took the life of a National Guardsman.

Wallgren's doctor attributed death to heart and kidney complications. A pickup truck plowed into Wallgren and Pfc. Gerhard Shock, 22-year-old National Guardsman who had stopped to help Wallgren fix a flat tire on the Nisqually River Bridge east of here.

Doctors amputated Wallgren's right leg and put his left in a cast. Only a week before his death, Wallgren was interested in fishing and hunting, was a former national billiards champion and enjoyed playing golf. He once shot a hole in one on the last hole of a best ball golf match.

Wallgren's physician said the former governor was "doing splendidly" and described his condition as "excellent."

The sudden turn for the worse occurred early Monday morning. Wallgren was placed unconscious under oxygen. Death came 16 hours later, at 6:15 p.m.

His widow, Mabel, was at the hospital when Wallgren died. During his nearly 20 years of public service, Wallgren, a long-time Democrat, held a number of top-ranking government jobs.

He served in the U.S. House of Representatives in 1938-41, the U.S. Senate in 1941-45, was governor of Washington in 1945-49 and was a member and chairman of the Federal Power Commission in 1949-51.

Wallgren was born Monrad Charles Wallgren in Des Moines, Iowa, April 17, 1891.

Besides his widow, he is survived by a brother, Lloyd, of Everett, and a sister, Mrs. Maudie Hickey also of Everett.

Episcopalians Consider Leaving Church Council

DETROIT (AP)—A move to pull the Episcopal Church out of the National Council of Churches developed at the Episcopal General Convention today. It appeared to have only scattered support but the issue may stir up one of the liveliest hassles at the church's triennial meeting.

Delegates representing 3 1/2 million Episcopalians across the country, agreed Monday to bring it into the open for debate.

at the opening session of the House of Deputies, representative branch of the church's two-chamber governing body.

The council is formed by 33 Protestant denominations with nearly 40 million adherents. Some Episcopalians are disturbed by its pronouncements on controversial political issues.

The diocese of Southwestern Virginia submitted a resolution adopted by Pulaski, Va., Episcopalians calling on the church to resign from the council.

Cutoff Road Will Close

EUGENE (AP)—The Clear Lake cutoff road between the McKenzie and Santiam highways will not be kept open this winter, state Highway Engineer W. C. Williams said Monday.

The McKenzie Highway is closed each year by snow above the Clear Lake cutoff junction. Chambers of Commerce in the area had expressed hope that the 20-mile highway might be kept open this winter to provide an all-weather route from Bend through the Cascades to the Eugene-Springfield area.

Williams said the state will not use snow plows on the road until paving and other final work is completed next year.

Coup Warned In OAS Move

CIUDAD TRUJILLO, Dominican Republic (AP)—Gen. Rafael L. Trujillo Jr., generally considered to be the power in this nation, feels that continuation of sanctions against the Dominican Republic by the Organization of American States would result in a military coup.

Trujillo, who became chief of the armed forces after his father's assassination last May 30, told newsmen Monday he could not "morally impede" a military bid for power if the reasons are sound.

"Logical reasons" for a coup, he said, would involve the nation's restoration to the hemisphere family through renewed diplomatic recognition.
