Hi-Fi Show Indicates Big Boom

By L. J. KRAMP
AP Newsfeatures

Tuners and adapters to convert high fidelity sets so they can receive stereo broadcasting signals were a major attraction at the New York hi-fi show.

But many of the 30,000 visitors had eyes only for do-it-yourself kits, stereo headphones, ultra-thin speakers and more refined models of tape and record players.

Stereophonic or multiplex broadcasting was approved by the Federal Communications Commission in April. Some FM stations in large city areas began using the new system in April. The FM stations send out two signals over two channels onto a single radio wave. This is called multiplexing. By tuning in both over two loudspeakers or two sides of a set of headphones, a listener can hear stereophonic music, usually pre-recorded on tapes or records.

The monophonic FM radio tuner of your present hi-fi set will receive all of the musical signals through either one or two speakers. To separate the signals, so they can be fed through separate amplifiers and speakers, you may obtain ready made, or assemble from lower priced kits, a multiplex converter, or a substitute stereophonic tuner. Converters run $30 to $100; tuners from $60 to $200 up. Some stereo tuners are FM only; others have AM for monophonic radio. Some include preamplifiers or amplifiers or both. Each addition costs more.

Stereo records and tapes should get a big boost from stereo broadcasting, just as monophonic records and tapes of good music attracted a greater market through single-channel FM broadcasting. Multiplex is expected to make hi-fi fans of many people who have held off because they were waiting for it or because they were content with their monophonic records or tapes and didn't want to go into stereo.

Some won't want to spend $100 to $200 for a new FM stereo tuner and will try assembling their own from kits. This should give the growing kit business a shot in the arm, drawing some fans who never have tried kits.

Also, some people who want to avoid buying a second speaker immediately upon going into stereo may buy headphones at $25 up. New makes of headphones are available and previous ones have been improved. With them you can hear stereo radio without disturbing others or being disturbed by them.

The ultra-thin speakers, some streamlined to four inches thick, fit in with home decoration better than the bulkier, baster floor and bookshelf models of yesteryear. Some of the thin models can be hung on walls, from ceilings or used as room dividers or floor screens.

Probably the most unusual record changer was a new Fisher-Lincoln model which plays both sides of a record before dropping the next one onto the turntable. Its price and width are both abnormally large.

There were more tape decks at the show. A tape deck, or transport, plays back pre-recorded tapes. The tapes have had a rebirth recently in four-track versions which double the sound on a single reel of tape. Now there is more opportunity to avoid buying an unwanted tape recorder as part of the unit when all you want is a playback device.

A new version of the sealed reel, or tape cartridge, was introduced in RCA Victor's new stereo playback and recorder, priced considerably below a previous model which also was bulkier.

Quartet Brings Down House -- Just Any Place

By CLAIRE COX

NEW YORK (UPI)—All God's children have wings — even in night clubs.

So say the Grandisons, a Negro quartet from Norfolk, Va., which is spreading the gospel on the night club circuit.

The Grandisons, three women and a man, have set audiences to tapping their feet, clapping their hands and even singing from San Francisco's hungry i into Greenwich Village's No. 1 Sheridan Square.

They also sing in churches — which is how they got their start. And they explain their presence in night spots by saying the people who go to church also like to go out and have a good time.

The present makeup of the Grandisons is: Mary and Helen Grandison, who are sisters, and their first cousins, Dorothy Webster and Floyd Bibbins. The girls sing and Floyd sings and plays the piano.

When the singers first went out from Norfolk, the group was made up of six Grandisons, all girls. Mary says that was too big, explaining "you don't need that many people to make music." Three girls—all relatives—dropped out and Floyd signed up with his cousins.

At first they traveled from church to church, singing gospel hymns. Then they met Richard Lukins, a young New Yorker, who became their manager. He started booking them in night clubs and on television shows. Only recently they made their first recordings, for RCA.

The Grandisons live over a church in Harlem and still spend all their Sundays singing for congregations, but now that they are making money in night clubs they refuse payment from churches.

It is a happy quartet and it is happiest when belting out a hymn. They use the old standards such as "Jericho," "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot" and "Go Down Moses," but with the Grandison beat they sound like new songs.

When they are accused of singing religious "rock 'n' roll," the Grandison's bridle. They say they are practitioners of one of the few real American folk music forms—the Negro gospel hymn. By singing in night clubs, they say, they are introducing a whole new segment of America to this music.

"We have noticed," Mary Grandison said, "that in a night club where liquor is served, many people become reverent during some of our hymns. They sometimes stop drinking.

"There are hundreds of gospel groups, but they have not broken out of the rigid mold. We have moved our music from its native habitat into conditions not found in church, yet we never have been subject to ridicule, mockery or laughter."

If they find they are becoming too busy, the Grandisons can always organize a second company, or even a third, for there are plenty more of them at home.

"They all sing," Mary said. "The family just never stops singing. It wouldn't know how."
