EXPLANATIONS ACROSS
 3. A mother can ASSURE that her child will always be law-abiding if he is reared correctly. She cannot ASSURE this beyond a doubt, however. Some people rebel against authority and "go wrong" sometimes, no matter how hard the parents tried to bring them up right.
 6. The idea of speed expressed in "hasten to call" favors DRAIN. A DRAIN pipe is in constant use and any signs of clogging would warrant fast action in cleaning it out. A TRAIN could be sent to the yards and await attention from the regular cleaner. GRAIN, if it needs cleaning before being shipped, would presumably not present need for haste.
 9. The FRAME, if it is ugly or "wrong" for the painting, can easily spoil the appearance of an otherwise attractive picture. A most worthless member of our society can give one greater insight into present moral standards, even if one only learns the very worst about people as they are now. The DRESS (or attire) of society is not indicative of moral standards, as history abundantly illustrates.
 22. A person who lives in SIN can stop doing so if he desires so he must enjoy his sinful life. Some people who literally live in the SUN do so because they have jobs which keep them outdoors all the time, and they may not enjoy it at all.

EXPLANATIONS DOWN

1. Certain men—i.e., law officers—would spend a lot of time searching for a CROOK, since it is part of their jobs to do so. It seems unlikely that any man would spend a lot of time searching for a tiny stream, or BROOK, for if it was so small that he couldn't locate it quickly, it may even have run dry.
 2. Finding his audience MILDLY enthusiastic, a wise entertainer would certainly do his utmost to please them, and to win more vigorous approval. If the audience was so WILDLY enthusiastic that they drowned out the entertainer's voice, for example, he couldn't be expected to give a very good performance.
 4. A war hero going into battle feels subconsciously that he will be SPARED, that the bullets always have someone else's "name" on them. He has survived before and will again. He doesn't "feel subconsciously" that he will be SCARED. Fear is felt by even the bravest soldiers, and he is already SCARED even before the battle, but will fight bravely in spite of it.
 9. Being confronted with many unfamiliar FACTS on his very first day in kindergarten, is very confusing to the small pup who is too nervous and excited to remember them anyway. New 21. Studying the DREGS, or much since he has undoubtedly been told that he will meet many new people.

 11. One thinks of a MOUNTAIN as being cool and green, so on an uncomfortably hot day it makes one feel better to think about it. On the other hand, thinking about a FOUNTAIN when one is hot and thirsty could make a person even thirstier, and could make one feel worse instead of better.
 13. After the area in which a patrol is missing has been COMBED thoroughly, the C.O. is justified in giving up the search. There are several men in a patrol, so he can safely assume that they have been captured by the enemy since none were found. Men can survive even in an area which is BOMBED thoroughly—especially trained soldiers—so the C.O. would not be justified in giving up the search in this case.
 14. A motorist going around a BAND in the road at high speed would probably get a ticket for endangering the lives of the BAND members as well as his own. He might not get fined for going around a BEND at high speed. It might be only a slight curve, and anyway, he might not be observed doing so.
 16. A rancher who HIRES an escaped criminal may well be in for serious trouble, since the criminal could steal, rob, or even commit murder at the ranch. Ranches are generally large estates, and if the rancher HIDES the criminal somewhere on his property, it might never be proven that he did so.
 17. Most older people feel a bit nostalgic when thinking of the LARKS, or frolics, of their youth. Many people would not have any memories of PARKS, having grown up in an area that had none, and at any rate, if people think of PARKS at all, it's usually because of the LARKS, or good times, they had in them.
