ALTURAS GARDEN CLUB

The regular monthly meeting of the Alturas Garden Club was held at the home of Mrs. Tessie Rush on Thursday, Sept. 14. Mrs. Rush was assisted by Mrs. Jay Noviack.

The meeting was called to order by Mrs. Ralph Laird, president. Twelve members answered the roll call. It was announced officially that the Alturas club had captured first prize for its exhibit at the Cedarville Fair and second prize at the Inter-Mountain Fair. The committee chairman, Mrs. Charles McPheeters and members of her committee were given a vote of thanks for their efforts. A general discussion followed in which various members offered ideas and impressions whereby changes and improvements in technique might help to insure continued success another year.

Mrs. Laird, accompanied by Mrs. Fred Huffman, attended the Klamath Falls Garden Club Flower Show on Aug. 30 and reported it as outstanding in perfection of flowers, staging, and unusual arrangements.

Mrs. Guy Young, building chairman, announced that within the week the water and sprinkling system would be installed at the new club house at Fourth and East streets. Jack Stark, custodian at the cemetery, offered freely of his time and help and procured volunteer service in the way of clearing the lot and the necessary digging equipment for the pipe lines.

We The Women

Perhaps It's A Matter Of Dollars And Scents

Ruth Millett

News story with a London date line: "Sniffing through statistics, the Society of French Perfumers discovered to their horror that British men spend more on scents than do British women."

How to explain that situation? Well, perhaps British women are more logical than feminine. If so, they've probably reasoned it out this way:

Why do women buy and wear perfume? Because men like it. So take it a step further. If the men are so crazy about perfume, why not let them indulge their noses by paying out of their own wallets for perfume?

They can get all those scented shaving lotions, soaps, colognes, and now they can even buy scented neckties.

That way, the British women The club is grateful for his cooperation and helpfulness and for the time and labor he has devoted to this project.

might reason, men can choose whatever scent they like best — the scent of leather, pine trees, new-mown hay or anything else that strikes their fancy.

Furthermore, they can douse themselves in it to their heart's content.

Or perhaps it was like this: Maybe the men were splashing on so many perfumed preparations that the women thought, "With all the pine scent he wears he'll never know whether I'm wearing my favorite scent, anyhow. So why spend my good money trying to lure him with perfume when he is so prettied up with pine fragrance he won't even know I'm wearing perfume?"

These are just a couple of possible explanations. But those are only guesswork. When the French perfumers get to the bottom of the matter, which they have indicated they will waste no time doing, they may come up with some other reason. But what other reason could there possibly be?
