HOUSES UNEMPLOYED

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The District of Columbia bloodhounds have joined the rolls of the unemployed — victims of urbanization.

The dogs were used to track down fugitives from the district's reformatory in nearby Lorton, Va. The reformatory used to be in the country, where a bloodhound could sniff his way around.

But the region has become densely populated, with corresponding smells. This confusion of odors so baffled the bloodhounds that they will have to be sold.
