Unemployment Is A Challenge

According to Secretary of Labor W. Willard Wirtz, more productive man-hours were lost in the first 11 months of 1962 through unemployment than in all the strikes of the past

The secretary does not discount the seriousness of strikes nor the need to settle them as quickly as possible. Like his predecessor, Arthur Goldberg, he has personally intervened in labor disputes.

Yet Wirtz believes that the question of unemployment is a fundamentally more important matter than strikes, spectacular as some of them may be.

A sluggish economy and the growing use of automation have kept unemployment hovering around 5.5 per cent of the total work force for several years. The November figure was unexpectedly swollen by 150,000 teenagers looking for jobs.

Some of this persistent unemployment is "hard core," made up of workers who are not so much unemployed as unemployable, They would be out of work no matter what the state of the economy was.

The balance includes, among others, people whose jobs have disappeared from under them, whether because of recession or because of technological change. It is these the nation cannot afford to let become unemployable.

For their part, some labor leaders have come up with nothing better than urging a 35-hour work week. While this may be a stopgap measure during a recession, it would, in the long run, spur the pace of automation all the more. Manufacturers would naturally seek ways to overcome the loss of productivity which would result from having more men do less work. If they did not, they would have

Prosperity cannot be built with a plan that would only spread around available work; it is achieved by increasing the amount of work to be done - by opening up new industries and new areas of employment.

This is what has happened since the industrial revolution began in America. It is happening now. Millions of people are employed making products or performing services that were unknown 20 years ago.

For many older workers displaced by machines or stranded with skills no longer needed, the government's retraining and relocation programs around the country are helping make their period of unemployment one of preparation, not desperation. Industries and unions also conduct similar retraining

For teen-agers who find a blank wall facing them after they leave school, the need is not for retraining but for the right training in the first place. Knowledge and skills, not muscles and availability, are the basic requirements for fruitful employment today.

Unemployment is a challenge to everyone, from grade school teachers to senior senators. The challenge is being met. The question is whether it is being met fast

NATO Turning Point

(The New York Times)

At the Paris NATO meeting, Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara again presented to our allies the American objectives: A larger number of divisions between the Alps and the Baltic, and a closely integrated nuclear deterrent. These objectives are sound, but the Kennedy administration's achieving them leaves almost as much to be desired as did the methods of its predecessors.

The NATO meeting was preceded by an abrupt notification to Britain-our most important ally-that Washington was seriously considering the cancellation of the Skybolt, the air-launched ballistic missile on which the Conservative Government had built most of its military policy and much of its political fortune. The meeting itself, therefore, was overshadowed by this development, a development that could influence the future history of NATO, and particularly the Anglo-American and Anglo-French relationships.

Moreover, Washington's continued insistence that Europe is not doing enough in organizing, training and equipping conventional forces fell on rather deaf ears, since the basic case for 30 divisions as "adequate," as compared to the present 25, is still not clear to many Europeans. The willingness of the United States to "aid"-though how much was never specified-the development of a European nuclear deterrent represented some advance over the more or less stand-pat negativism of the past. But NATO noted that Mr. McNamara - still in disagreement with the highly respected Supreme Allied Commander. Europe, General Lauris Norstad, who is soon to retire-stressed the importance of a seaborne rather than a land-based nuclear de-

The Paris meeting, therefore, really posed more problems than it solved. NATO members collectively and individually must now face realistically in private discussions what is clearly a turning point in the history of NATO. A restudy of present objectives, a determination of new ones, and above all a codification satisfactory to all NATO's 15 members of the basic strategic concept of the Alliance is essential. Such a study requires time and contemplation; Washington's past tactics of polite coercion, illustrated by the Skybolt episode, will win no friends and in-

New UN Finance Formula

By PETER EDSON Washington Correspondent Newspaper Enterprise Assn. WASHINGTON (NEA) - There will be a special session of the United Nations General Assembly next spring to consider new ways to finance the world organization's peace-keeping operations.

This has been one of the mafor objectives of American eign policy at the U.N. It has been one of the most troublesome issues for the U.S. at the U.S. particularly as it relates to fin peace-keeping in the Congo and the Near East. A 21-nation committee will try work out new formulas to financing such operations in ad-vance of the special assembly This will be in compliance with resolution adopted by a 76 to 17 vote, with 10 abstentions, at the close of the 1962 session.

It endorsed the World Court opinion that all U.N. members must pay their assessments for peace-keeping operations. This is the key not only to preventing U.N. bankruptcy but also to mak ing the world organization an elfective peace enforcement agency

The nations which did not vote for the General Assembly resolution on financing were 10 manist countries and Cuba France, Jordan, Portugal, Arabia, Syria and South Africa. As of Jan. 1, 1963, 10 countries will be in arrears on their pay ments for 1961 and 1962. Thi could cause them to lose their votes in the coming special session of the General Assembly. if they do not pay something on account before it curvenes.

Seven are Latin-American countries - Argentina, Bolivia, Cuba, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras and Paraguay. The others are Hungary, United Arab Republic and Nationalist China

U.N. accounting is so complicat ed that the position of Russia is unclear. The Soviet has re fused to pay assessments for the Congo, Near East and other special funds.

Russia was $32 million in ar rears for 1960 and 1961, Its as-sessments for 1962 are about 13 ser cent of the total U.N. budget They include, in round numbers regular assessment of $11 mi lion, a Congo assessment of $16 million and an emergency fund assessment of $3 million on a full year basts. The total is around $10 million, but the record of payments or 1962 is not yet complete.

The Russians would have to become more than $60 million in ar rears for 1961 and 1962 to lose sidered likely they will allo- this to happen. They are expected to pay up enough to prevent being counted out, even though they do not cooperate on U.N. peace-keeping operations.

There has been an increase of operations in the past year. New U.N. "presences" were es tablished in Western New Guin ea, Oman, Yemen and on the That-Cambedian border. The Palestine refugee relief operation, which was to have ended in 1993. was extended for two more years with better Arab-Israeli coopera-

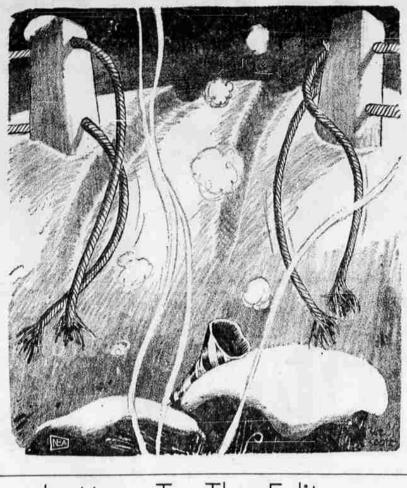

The American idea for sending one-man observation missions to report on conditions in Portuguese Angola and Mozambique was op posed by both Portugal and the Afro-Asians, But at the General Assembly session just ended, the U.S. delegation was able to walk a diplomatic rightwire without an gering either side or falling into either camp. The American delegation's rec ord on colonialism-still one of the most controversial issues before the U.N.-was mixed, Many of the Afro-Asian nations went along with the U.S. proposal to get turget dates out of a general resolution supporting freedom and independence for all former approachly on Southwest Africa. not so well on Rhodesia.

On an assembly resolution sop porting the right of any country a nationalize foreign-owned prop erties in its territory, the American proposal that there must be just and prompt compensation was softened to a provision that the seizure must be in accord with international law

But it is the Congo situation and the financing of the U.N. peacekeeping operation that presents the biggest cloud on the UN horizon. If the U.N. plan for unfication of the Congo succeeds, it will be offered as evidence that no single nation and no other organization could have brought

If the U.N. plan fails, one alternative is that the United States will have to throw its resources into the Congo on a proventive basis to prevent the Russians from trying to take it over as they did in 1980.

Too Late?

For the past several weeks I have watched with mounting amazement the furor over the question of "to zone or not to zone." That there should be a controversy only indicates a lamentable lack of knowledge on the part of the dissenters, aug-mented by their insistent refusal to concede that one iota of good ever can come from the com bined efforts of a great many dedicated and fairly intelligent people. They also are residents of this same suburban area and have given unselfishly of their time without one cent of pay over the past three years to see if something can't be done to improve the living conditions in our

Here perhaps is the very basic root of our troubles; that the opposition has so very little conception of what a beautiful suburban area we could have had by now had we only started our planning and had the proper zoning forty, or even fifty, years

It is particularly lamentable that the opposition's chief object tion seems to be to the fact that the members of the Planning Com mission have had the foresight to ask help from other commu ties who have met and solved this problem. And that they have asked that a paltry few of our own tax dollars be returned to us by the federal government to enable them to hire an all too slender staff of trained help to assist in digesting the mountain of data that has been gathered in order that we may apply it to our own needs. And, in addition, they object to the fact that it is proposed that we outlaw our slip-shed methods of the past which they so fondly call "private planning," and replace it with a carefully worked out plan for the future, for a controlled growth for

Even as I write these words can bear this vocal minority indignantly shouting. "What's the matter with our suburbs? They are just fine the way they are We don't want them changed Which, of course, is all right for this small minority. But doubt if most people who live in the suburbs are too happy with

Almanac

By United Press International Today is Monday, Dec. 31, the last day of 1962. This is New Vene's Eve.

The moon is approaching its first quarter. The morning stars are Venus and Mars

The evening stars are Jupiter and Saturn. Those born on this day include

French painter Henry Mattise, in On this day in history on this day in history in 1879, a crowd gathered at Men's Park, N.J. to watch Thomas as Edison's first public doman-stration of his electric meandes-cent lamp. In 1890, Ellis Island in New York Harbor became the receiv ing station for all immigrants to the United States entering on the Atlantic Coast. A thought for the day-Charle Lamb wrote: "Of all sound of all is the peal which rings out the areas, where some of the most vocal of the opposition now live. "What's wrong with it?" they ask. Plenty. The first full mile of Shasta Way after crossing the canal is one long built-in traffic hazard. It is too narrow to carry half its present traffic, let alone the increasing load in years to come. It is lined with deep ditches; pedestrians have to walk in the street; it is bordered by al-ternate good homes, shacks, barber shops, country grocery stores, more homes, service stations, weed covered lots, trailer bouses good homes and more shacks.

Had there been proper planning forty years ago Shasta Way to-day could be a thing of pride and joy to both the city and the people who live there. It would be at least 100 feet wide with fic. sidewalks, side access streets for the better shops and stores that would be glad to be there in specially roned areas, and far better homes in each of the separate zones which would have been set aside for the low, me dium and high cost areas. And when various pieces of property on the street came up for sale as all property does sooner or later, the owners would be sale in the knowledge that they would get one hundred cents on the dollar of fair market value instead of the haggled prices which now so many of them have to settle planning" care to see another choice example of what lack of controlled growth can blossom into, I suggest they take a leisure-ly drive out Altamont Drive. Here's one of the more choice examples of Private Planning in these United States, an area where the owners of the few remaining good medium priced houses are fortunate if they get seventy-live cents on the dollar for what the same house would get them in lucky if they get half that. Note particularly any one of the several auto wrecking yards and juni shops which have been started up in some vacant lot, in the midst of what once were some very de-scrable homes. Then see how as the years sped on and these blights continued to spread their cancerous growth until the whole neighborhood became, to put it politely, "eligible for cler and suburban renewal." Th area which I recall, not so ma years ago, ay being bright, neat, clean and attractive, one which we were proud to show visitors

And as you drive on around swing down Summers Lane and see the blight which already has started to creep in there under the banner of Private Planning Take a good look, too, at the area in the vicinity of the drive-in theatre. These people had every theatre there when they did. But now that the town has grown out around them the theatre its moise, traffic and confusion has become a source of continual ritation to everyone who lives within sight of it-and an admit ted nuisance to anyone who owns a home on any of the access roads leading into it. And even the the-atre people, now, are at a disadvantage. Had there been zoning and an area set aside for de velopments of that kind they still would have room to expand today to add the additional recreations facilities such as bowling alleys, amusement devices and the family recreational areas which are proving so protitable a sideline

drive-in theatres in cities where this need for future expansion had been seen and provided for Then, go a little further out Summers Lane and turn down towards Peterson School. You will find that you have driven past hundreds of fine new homes, more new homes still building But stop just short of the new Catholic church and take a look to the south. There, only a couple of hundred vards off this rapidly growing street, is a large collec-tion of old weather-beaten pens and buildings. That, my irien a slaughterhouse. Fortunately, for the owners of these new homes it has been out of operation these last couple or three years. But only recently it was advertised for sale on bids by the bankruptcy referee. And unless the zoning ordinance goes into effect before someone buys it and starts oper ation, there is not a thing God's green world to keep it from operating forevermore, with fragrant odor of mamire spreading throughout the neighborhood. and the peace and quiet being disrupted by the noise and confusion of stock trucks and freight trucks coming and going, and the cries of cattle and pigs being brought in for slaughter, filling the neighborhood with their pleas ant sounds once more. Then swing on around and come back down Homedale. This is another very fine residential neighborhood. Except, that is, for one of the largest logging equip ment repair yards in the state be ing nestled right in amo group of $20,000 and $30,000 homes Fortunately, the present owner has done everything be can to keep it as neat as possible. But let's face it; it's still a major repair yard with all the noise an confusion and unsightliness that must be a part of even the best run yards. And what happens next the present owner sell out to someone who doesn't care? And most repair yard owners don't conder if the most milita of the objectors to the proposed new roning knows that within the last month a local entrepreneur has made inquires into the possibility of buying a 20 acre tract et land only a very short dis-tance from her own very fin'e home up in the vicinity of Moyina Heights? For what purpose? The operation of a public trup shoot a very fine example of free think ing private planning at its best It is a good site, well laid out for the purpose. # STRICTLY PERSONAL

Not long ago, I took out nine year-old boys for a birthday party given by my son. All the boys behaved well-but the din of their voices was deafening

Why do young children, on the whole, talk so loudly, and seem low the level of a shout? Part of it, of course, is due to the exp berance of youth, the superflu-ous energy that must be discharged in physical motions and exercise of the vocal cards.

But there is another, and per-haps larger, part. Young children are not used to being listened to by adults. They have to repeat and repeat, until finally they adopt the habit of shouting to be heard at all. Few adults really "listen" to what a child is try ing to say.
I came home from work the other day, tired and a little cross and my boy accosted me enthu siastically with a report of some chemical experiment be had been making, I nodded absent-mindedly as he told me about the chemi cals he had used, and the results he had achieved. But I wasn't really listening-until he repeated it the third time in shout-lan guage. Then I told him not to

Very little children, of 2 or 3, are just learning to communicate Their words are garbled and imprecise-but they know what they mean. If adults make little effort to understand this embryonic language, then the children sense a kind of "psychic deafness" in us and raise their voices to compensate.

We can see this mechanism working more clearly when we are addressing a foreigner in our language, if he doesn't grasp what we are saying, we speak more loudly—as if the physical volume alone will get the message through. Most of us address for-eigners as if they were deaf and dumb, as if sheer force of tone will pierce their minds.

To children, all adults are for eigners of a sort, in that we do not readily grasp what they are

which she keeps in her back yard. but the shoot would be within the easy corshot of not only her place, but of all the many other $20,000 to $50,000 homes which rapidly are covering that particu-lar section of foothills.

And if anyone thinks this is a trivial or laughing matter, please drive out to Wocus on any sunny Sunday afternoon (or morning of evening, too) when they are hold-ing a shoot out there and listen to the racket. Or even on days that are not so sunny. They were at it again last weekend, as they are almost every week of the year -which they have a perfect right to do, as there was no zoning when they first built there either But the inevitable tragic resulhas been that what otherwise well could have developed into one o the nicest medium priced residen-tial areas around Klamath Falls has been condemned forevermore to a third rate existence where it is difficult even to give a house away, much less sell it for a de cent cash price. Just one more example of "private planning," which is actually another name for "get in there and do whatever you want first; to bell with the other people." I could cite still more examples.

until the newspaper ran out of space, but these few should be enough to bring people's attention back to the fact that this matter of zoning is not a fight against some "foreign ideology" tect our "constitutional rights. It is an attempt of private citizens to band together and stop the more reckless of our neigh bors from doing unnecessary harmful things which tear down our neighborhood, destroy property rights and our rights as citizens to live peacefully in our own community

And list, but not least, if the opposestis chief battle - cry is that we must crusade against ron ing because it is a foreign ideology. And I it is foreign ideologies they are against why don't they take up a crusade against those several and very basic fundamentals in our stitution that were borrowed directly from that English does ment known as the Magna Charto? And why don't they campaign that were handed down to us it a tribe of wandering Jews? And somehow, too. #### Temperance

All of us in Klamath County should be grateful that people are showing an interest in public affairs such as zoning, the dis-trict attorney, deerslaying and the schools. Many have been apathetic too long about these and many more important com-munity affairs. Controversy is good for a community. No prog-ress is ever made without disagreement. Democracy is built upon differences of opinion.

There are three attitudes, however, that can destroy the benefits of controversy. The first is cowardice, the unwillingness to stand up and be counted. Our nation contains such a variety of people, that we tend to avoid arguments at all costs. When we do so, the costs are too great because we lose our freedom by knuckling under to an organized minority or to the loudest vocal chords. Silence can be yellow, not

The second destructive attitude is to seek, consciously or uncon-sciously, for private advantage or privilege against the common

The third is, that when we disagree we become hostile toward the person with whom we disagree, and attempt to knock down his argument by attacks on his integrity, his person, or his motives. Could we dare to hope that aroused citizens could learn to respect each other's intentions and motives even when disagreeing thoroughly with ideas?

Just for the record, I am strongly in favor of the zoning principle, even though as a home owner I personally could stand to lose property value from zoning. There is nothing unconstitutional or un-American about govern-mental control to preserve my neighbors' freedom. The Ameriway says that my freedom ends where my neighbor's free-dom (and his nose!) begins. Our argument really should be with specific features of the zoning ordinance, not with whether or not to have zoning I am in favor of the present district attorney. Having worked closely with him, I have personal knowledge of his integrity and his ntelligence and his concern for improved law enforcement. He cannot be bought. What more do we want? Experience? We don't pay enough for that, Experience comes with years. Most D.A.s be

Our school problems will be solved more easily when all of us quit thinking about how much this is going to cost as personally and begin to think about what is the best education for our children. A reorganization for a county-wide school district, grades 1-10, is certainly a step in the right direction, and I believe that the 6-3-3 system has proved itself nation-wide as valuable.

Let's keep on disagreeing, but let's also get more facts and less emotion. Above all, let's begin to trust each other as normal, hardrens, each attempting to develop the best future possibilities of
