Survey Draws Composite School Board Member

Encounter a local school board member in Oregon and he is likely to be a 45-year-old man, married and with children in the public schools, the possessor of some college education, holding a professional or managerial job, active in other community organizations, a Protestant and a Republican.

These are among the findings of a survey reported in the December Bulletin of the Oregon School Study Council, published by the School of Education at the University of Oregon.

The study, conducted among 23 school districts in Washington, Multnomah, Lane, and Marion counties, was made by Dr. Sidney W. Tiedt, who received his Ph.D. at the university in 1960 and is now a member of the faculty at San Jose State College.

Despite the general picture which emerged from the study, "school board members are more complex in their values and beliefs than has been assumed by some writers in the field," according to Dr. Tiedt, and the members must "be considered as individuals rather than stereotypes if one is to gain understanding of this group," which is one of the most important and influential factors in public education.

The study revealed that school board members' educational values and beliefs cannot be safely predicted from a study of their political beliefs.

Members were evenly distributed on the traditional, enlightenment, and censure scales designed to reveal educational values and attitudes toward public schools.

On the other hand, the tests on general and political values showed that the majority ranked high on the authoritarian, morality, and conservative scales, and low on the contemptuousness scale.

The indication is, according to Dr. Tiedt, that educational values are not as deep-seated as general values and "might, therefore, be more easily modified to keep abreast of modern trends."

School board members are not representative of the general population, the study showed, in that they tend to be members of a higher socio-economic group with higher incomes, higher education levels, and positions which carry more prestige.

"School board members view the purpose and main function of the school with a broad interpretation," Dr. Tiedt wrote. Among the school goals most favored by the members were providing a broad education, preparing for adult life, and teaching the three R's.

Cast Rehearses Comedy

Rehearsals for "The Man in the Dog Suit," a three-act comedy to be presented by the Klamath Civic Theatre the end of January and the first of February, are progressing well, and the group is happily taking advantage of a brief visit by Margo Lungreen for some extra coaching.

Miss Lungreen, who organized the original group when she was home recuperating from a serious illness during the summer of 1961, is a professional actress in New York with many television and stage credits.

The play will be presented in the Pine Grove Room of the Willard Hotel Jan. 24, 25, 30, 31 and Feb. 1 and 2, with the profits from the performance Jan. 31 to be donated to the Hospital Fund.

Due to the illness of a cast member, the group is looking for a replacement for the part of Anthony Roberti, the cousin from Omaha.

Anyone who would like to read for the part is urged to call Nancy Hagerman at TU 2-8207, or come to rehearsals Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday evening at 8 p.m. in the Klamath Auditorium dining room.
