Father Of Atomic Sub Claims Technology Menaces Democracy

NEW YORK (UPI)—A leader in development of the atomic submarine said democracy was being undermined because the average voter could not understand the complexities of technological advances.

This appraisal was presented by Vice Admiral Hyman G. Rickover, who has been called "the father of the nuclear submarine," in a speech before the fund for the republic.

Rickover called the situation "a crisis of intelligence."

"... In a subtle way democracy is undermined when an important aspect of the life of individuals and communities can no longer be judged by the voter but must be entrusted to experts who work in areas of science that the general public does not comprehend," he said.

As presently constituted, he said, democratic institutions—through which the public expresses its will—"are themselves not well equipped to control the proper use of technology."

To illustrate his point, Rickover referred to a recent case in the U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington.

In the case, the city of New Britain, Conn., was trying to prevent a private firm from receiving and storing radioactive wastes in the city for disposal elsewhere.

In rejecting the case, the court, according to Rickover, said in effect: "The Atomic Energy Commission knows the facts and it knows that they will not harm the city."

In other words, Rickover said, the court was admitting it was not equipped to handle the technical aspects of the case but had to rely on the best scientific and engineering advice it could obtain.

"The wise use of technology calls for a higher order of thinking than we have so far accorded it," he said. "We have left it to the management of practical men."

"I submit that we now have scientific knowledge of such immense potential that we ought to bring a broader range of intellectual power to bear upon its use."

Practical men, Rickover said, are concerned with ways to put technological advances to use in the most economical and efficient manner. He said they give little thought to side effects and future consequences.

Rickover said there was more need for the scholarly approach, which looks at the long range.

"As we climb relentlessly toward the billion mark in population," he said, "we shall have to give thought to strengthening local and state government, for it is in these smaller units that most people are most effective as citizens."

"As machines relieve us of the brutal, tiring, and time-consuming labor that had been the lot of the majority of men from time immemorial, as they enable us to universalize affluence and leisure, we face a choice," he said.

"We may take these benefits and live the life of the idle rich of old, pursuing a good time and not bothering about the quality of our own life or the life of the nation."

"Or we may decide to emulate these—and there were many—who in the past considered wealth and leisure a trust, to be utilized for self-improvement and for improvement of their particular societies," Rickover said.

He said the problem was complicated, however, by the growing mass of population and growth of bureaucracy.

Noting that sheer weight of numbers today has reduced the impact of an individual vote, he said "This can not be diminished by a citizen's sense of importance and lead to political apathy, itself the greatest threat to democracy."

"As we climb relentlessly toward the billion mark in population," he said, "we shall have to give thought to strengthening local and state government, for it is in these smaller units that most people are most effective as citizens."

Fourth Seat Bids Often

By OSWALD JACOBY
 Written for Newspaper Enterprise Assn.

In the early days of contract a player was supposed to be particularly careful about his fourth hand opening bids. The idea was that if he could pass and break even, why open and risk a loss?

This idea is exploded today. A winning player opens in fourth seat any time he thinks his chance to gain is better than his chance to lose.

One basic need is to have something in spades. If no one else can open the bidding and he has a doubtful opening himself the chances are that the hand will wind up in a part score and the side with spades will make that part score.

East has 11 high card points and two probable defensive tricks. In fourth seat he has reason to believe that his hand is the best at the table. But there is no reason to believe it is enough better than the next best hand to warrant opening without something in either spades or hearts.

It turns out that East does not have the best hand, West has passed a better one, but that does East and West no good.

South overcalls with one spade and North can compete as far as three spades.

At three spades South has to lose a spade, a heart and two diamonds. A club finesse works and he makes a nice part score.

Of course, East and West could have gone on to four diamonds. That would only be down one, but it would still represent a loss.

What do you do?

A—Bid four hearts. There is strong temptation to bid four no-trump and take full control, but if your partner holds good hearts and an ace he should find another bid over your four hearts. If he doesn't hold an ace you don't want to go past game.

Death Penalty Moratorium Introduced At Legislature

SACRAMENTO (UPI)—A bill to grant a limited moratorium on the death penalty in California was ready for introduction in the Legislature today.

It probably will be the most explosive single issue of the 1963 session.

Assemblyman Lester McMillan, D-Los Angeles, long a staunch opponent of capital punishment, had the bill ready to be tossed in the Assembly hopper and hoped for backing from Gov. Edmund G. Brown.

Although McMillan had spoken to Brown about his proposal, a last minute dispute developed between the lawmaker and the administration over when it should be introduced.

The McMillan bill would grant a four-year moratorium for all crimes but double murders, kidnap-murders, killing of a law enforcement officer and killing prison guards.

It was in line with a recommendation by Brown in his inaugural address and would substitute life in prison without possibility of parole for the death penalty.

"I'm convinced that the death penalty is not a deterrent to crime," said McMillan. "The experience of states and nations where they abolished it bear this out. They had no increase in homicide rates."

The Los Angeles assemblyman called execution a "degrading, barbaric" practice and called upon California to "get in line with the more enlightened states and nations in the world."

McMillan's last try at a moratorium died in a 40-40 tie vote in the Assembly. Brown lost his last all-out effort to abolish the death penalty outright in 1960 in the Senate Judiciary Committee.

But the governor's loss came in a special session called after he had delayed the execution of Caryl Chessman, Los Angeles kidnaper who died in the San Quentin gas chamber in May, 1960.

Last year 11 persons died in the gas chamber, including another controversial figure, Mrs. Elizabeth Duncan, who hired two young men to kill her daughter-in-law.

There are now 36 men on death row at the prison but the McMillan bill specifically excludes from the moratorium any persons who have been sentenced to die before the effective date of the measure next September.

Other major legislative developments:

Education — Assemblyman Charles B. Garrigus, D-Reedley, introduced a bill to increase state support to public schools by $115 million and enact a countywide school tax. The bill was backed by the California Teachers Association and conflicted with similar bills being prepared by the State Board of Education and the Assembly Education Committee.

Politics — Richard Carpenter, executive director of the League of California Cities, charged that Assemblyman Philip Burton's proposal to require party labels for city and county officials would return the state to "political bossism." Burton, a San Francisco Democrat, was ready to introduce the first such bill today.

Reorganization — An 11-member commission on state government organization gave unanimous endorsement to Brown's agency plan for reorganization and suggested it be expanded.

Fare Increase

SALEM (UPI)—The Red Ball stage line will increase its fares on Feb. 1, the State Public Utility Commission announced Monday.

The bus line has headquarters in Klamath Falls and operates between Klamath Falls and Lakeview.

Company spokesmen say the company has been losing money on its passenger operations for the past two years because of competition from air service and private autos.

Harpo Breaks Silence To Announce Retirement

PASADENA, Calif. (UPI)—After two decades of silence on stage, Harpo Marx has broken the rule at last.

It took a special occasion to bring words from Harpo—the announcement that he is retiring from show business.

"I'm going on 75 and I want to play golf, relax and travel," he told a capacity audience at Pasadena Civic Auditorium Saturday night.

Harpo gained fame as the silent girl chaser with the Marx Brothers comedy team on stage and in movies. He said Sunday he still would not have broken his stage silence except that Allan Sherman, a folk singer, told the audience of Marx's sudden decision.

"I told him (Sherman) that Susan (Mrs. Marx) and I had decided to call it a day and just take it easy," he said. "He began crying and got very nostalgic and then went out and told the audience."

"What could I do? I had to say a few words. I very shortly told the audience 'Thank you.' I didn't talk long and I didn't talk at all during the second show."

"Actually I did talk once in a night club show about 20 years ago in Toledo, Ohio, but I can't even remember what I said. For all I know, people think I can't talk because that was the only other time I talked during a performance in 45 years."

Marx said the decision to retire was a sudden one made with his wife of 26 years.

"Mrs. Marx and I were talking in the dressing room before the first show when I said, 'Gee, we could be home now. What are we doing here? What are we trying to prove?'"

He said his four children were in college and he and his wife were free to go wherever they wanted.

"We're like newlyweds now. We're all alone and we can do what we want."

Marx said he would honor five more bookings made previously through the end of March, all for charities, before retiring. He doesn't plan to talk in any of them.

His retirement leaves only Groucho of the famous live Marx Brothers still active in show business. The only other brother who stayed in the business was Chico, who died in 1961.
