Put one of our new Mercurys in a snowstorm and everyone it passes will quickly get the point of that new roofline and rear window. It doesn't collect snow or ice! All clear! If you take a close look at the cruising Mercury, notice side vents and windows are closed. Yet the driver is nice and relaxed. Not hunched over the wheel wondering what's coming up from the rear, or frantically wiping steam off sidewindows. By lowering the automatic rear window just a bit, Mercury's exclusive all that stale, steamy air out the back. What will summer bring? Heat. Dust. Glare. And another Mercury sales point. For when the weather hotsup, you can roll down all the windows, including the rear Breezeway, and duplicate the refreshing turbulence of a convertible. But over the long haul, windnoise can be gruelling. So roll up everything except the rear Breezeway. Fresh air moves in via front cowl vents and wafrs through the car, clearing out the heat and cigar smoke. Without disturbing a hair on your head. (And heads in the rear seat are protected from the sun, thanks to the elegant eave that extends out over the rear window. This toofline provides more headroom, too). Is that all? Not by a long shot. What your Flo-Thru Ventilation system discharges eye misses when a new Mercury drives past could well be the subject of a 15-minute demonstration on a nearby freeway (anytime you wish).
