Every Play Different

A single suit play is one in which you want to find the best way to play a particular suit. You must decide which card to lead from which hand. The usual method is to lead a low card from the weaker hand toward the stronger, but the only real general rule is that each case depends on its own merits and on how many tricks you need in the suit.

South has a standard two-trump opening and North a sound raise to three. It is expected that South will have little trouble making his contract and such is the case. In spite of West's spade lead, which is the best suit for his side to attack, South is sure of nine tricks by playing the club suit. He can lose to the king and still have two spades, three hearts, one diamond and three clubs.

South's problem is to find the best way to make four club tricks and a finesse is indicated. South wins the first spade, leads a heart to dummy and is ready to lead a club.

If he leads the deuce of clubs (normal low play) he will have to win in his own hand and won't be able to get back to dummy for a second finesse.

The correct play is to lead either the nine of clubs, intending to play the eight from his hand, or the queen, intending to play the jack or ten. With either play South is able to keep the lead in dummy for repeated finesses and will take four club tricks.

Overdone Religious Display Upsets Girl

By ANN LANDERS
 Dear Ann Landers: Is it in good taste to have all sorts of religious art on display in every room of the house?

I'm engaged to a young man whose religion is the same as mine. Whenever I go to his home (he lives with his parents) I feel as if I'm in a church. There are dozens of religious pictures on the walls, statues in every corner, and even the crocheted doilies have biblical sayings on them.

I've always felt that religion is sacred and highly personal. This gross over-display makes me uncomfortable.

I've discussed my feelings with my fiancé and he says he has never given it a thought because he grew up in the house and is accustomed to it. May I have your views on this?—PATRICIA

Dear Pat: There is good art and bad art. Regardless of the subject, bad art does nothing for a room.

A home is the reflection of the people who live in it. Your taste, obviously, is not the same as your future mother-in-law's. But you ought not to criticize her home. When you have a place of your own, decorate it as you wish.

Dear Ann Landers: A friend of my husband has taken up with a tramp. I will call the man Mr. Jerk. The man's wife has had a difficult time being both mother and father to their children. She has the respect and sympathy of everyone who knows her.

Mr. Jerk is not only my husband's friend he is a good client. My husband feels that for both reasons we should continue to be hospitable to him.

At first I agreed, on the theory that what he does with his life is his own business. But last week my husband told me that Mr. Jerk invited us to join his girl friend and him on a short trip to the Keys. I refuse to go because I don't want to be in the tramp's company.

My husband says I am naive, adolescent and narrow-minded. Am I?—SPEAKING MY PIECE

Dear Speaking: By accepting the invitation you give tacit approval to the whole shabby affair—as if it were just peachy.

Mr. Jerk has a right to live as he pleases, but if he chooses to behave in a scandalous manner he should not be surprised when he gets the name with the game.

If your husband wishes to keep Mr. Jerk's friendship for business reasons he can take the guy to lunch.

Dear Ann Landers: That letter from the happily married career girl knocked me off my pins. She must be some kind of a nut or something. I can't imagine a single girl not being delighted that her friends and relatives are thoughtfully trying to fix her up with eligible men. It should only happen to me.

My friends and relatives think of me only when the baby sitter folds out, or when they need someone to go to the hospital with them. Sometimes they think of me when they need a little errand run, because I have a car and "nothing to do evenings."

Most single girls put up a cheerful front because they have too much pride to let the world know they are wretched and lonely. I'll bet my red flannel nightgown that nine out of 10 "deliriously happy" career girls would pitch it all if they had the chance. I would—EMPTY EXISTENCE

Dear Empty: Some married women have an "empty existence," too. The grass isn't always greener, you know. Sometimes it just looks that way.

It may be that your personality is better suited for the single life—so cheer up.

Oregon National Guard Slates Muster Activity

SALEM—Muster Day activities for the Oregon National Guard will be Feb. 17-24, with most units sponsoring public programs on the closing Sunday.

Prime purpose of the annual program is to intensify recruiting and community awareness of the role of the National Guard, according to Major General Paul L. Kliever, Oregon adjutant general.

Recently announced reorganization of the guard left many units understrength, and a drive has been launched to bring their personnel strength up to requirements.

Muster Day also allows the community to view the training, equipment and personnel of local units. Guardsmen in several cities are planning open houses, and Portland units will sponsor a display at the Lloyd Center. Use of Muster Day to call attention to the role of the National Guard in community life dates to the nation's founding. In colonial days the militia was mustered each year on the village square, to count off the number of able-bodied men who would be available to bear arms in an emergency.

The National Guard revived the custom in 1956. February was chosen as the month for observance, in honor of George Washington, a colonel in the Virginia Militia.

Oregon has conducted the Muster Day programs since 1956 with the exception of 1961 and 1962, when no observance was scheduled.

California Presses For FPC Rule Requiring Power Firm To Pay 81% Of Fish Hatch Costs

SACRAMENTO—The California Senate Natural Resources Interim Committee, while satisfied with many of the results of the construction of Iron Gate Dam on the Klamath River, is continuing to press for three specific benefits according to Sen. Randolph Collier.

They are an FPC decision which would require Pacific Power and Light Company to defray 81 per cent of the cost of operating and maintaining the Iron Gate fish hatchery; detailed studies by the Department of Fish and Game of water temperatures below the dam and an analysis of possible modifications of installations on the Klamath to obtain the best continual flow of cool water for spawning; and revision of the FPC Federal Power Company license to Pacific Power and Light imposing a maximum release from the dam.

The committee at Collier's request held a hearing in Yreka last Aug. 31, and considered allegations of sportsmen and others that the Iron Gate Dam, then provide the full regulation of the Klamath River which had been sought.

The final report of the Interim Committee, recently released, found that the fluctuations of water flow during 1962 were almost entirely eliminated, except for certain periods beyond the control of the power company.

However, Collier pointed out, the dam was constructed to provide flow regulation, and there is no positive statement for full regulation in the license.

The committee, Collier explained, would like an amendment to the license setting a maximum of 1,750 cubic feet per second, which would be greater than normal releases of the company dam.

He said the committee will press for such an amendment if future flow management does not adhere to that expected or desired by the state wildlife agencies.

"The Klamath River fisheries are a major factor in Northern California economy," Collier said.

"The fishery reproduction is far less than should be expected in this system which includes many hundreds of miles of this waterway which is second only in California to the Sacramento-San Joaquin system. We dare not settle for less than optimum fish production from the river."

Inundate Spawning Beds
 The Iron Gate Dam has inundated 10 miles of former spawning beds and the old Fall Creek fish hatchery site, according to Collier.

The power company has made provision for fish trapping and egg collection facilities at the damsite, but has objected to state proposals that the company pay the cost of operation and maintenance of the fish hatchery. The California attorney general has appeared before the FPC seeking such an arrangement, Collier said, and may file for a court hearing on the subject.

The committee believes Pacific Power and Light should, in fairness, pay 81 per cent of the operation and maintenance cost, recognizing that portion of the new hatchery which will absorb the production of the state operated Fall Creek hatchery now inundated by Iron Gate Reservoir.

To Abate Nuisance
 "The dam was constructed to abate a nuisance created by the California Oregon Power Company's operations on the Klamath," Collier said. "It is only fair the company should pay the cost of replacing these hatchery facilities."

After the Yreka hearing, information was brought to the attention of the committee indicating that water temperatures of the Klamath are a much more important factor in Klamath River fish propagation than the hearing testimony indicated, Collier said.

More than 4,150,391 acres of timberland were burned by the 104,962 forest fires reported in 1960.

SCORE FIRST WIN
 BASEL, Switzerland (UPI)—The United States amateur hockey team which will compete in the world championships at Stockholm, Sweden, scored the first victory of its European tour Sunday when it downed Switzerland, 9-7. Marshall Tschiba and Jack Poole scored five points between them to pace the Americans' victory.

The committee has therefore asked for a detailed analysis of water temperatures of the river before and after power development began to determine if some modification is needed to prevent installations.

The committee recommended that the Department of Fish and Game make a detailed analysis of the possible modifications to Pacific Power and Light Company installations to provide the best continual flow of cool water.
