My Effervescent Adolescent

I can still recall my ecstatic "ah!"
The first time she smiled and called me "Ma."
I clearly hear how, at two or three,
She used to say "Mommy Dear" to me,
And many's the time—I remember them well—
When she'd hug me and say, "Gee, Mom, you're swell!"
But now it's all changed, and somehow or other
The best I rate these days is just, "REALLY, MOTHER!"
—Gerry Richelson

A young doctor had built up a lucrative practice in one of those balmy Southern settlements especially constructed for the elderly. Part of his success was his enthusiasm, which was amply evident as he described to a white-haired lady a new remedy he had.

"This treatment," he said, "is wonderful! You'll feel like you did long ago—and you'll look 10 years younger."

For a moment the elderly lady brightened, but then a worried look crossed her face. "Oh, dear," she moaned, "it won't affect my pension, will it?"

—F. G. Kernan

A five-year-old sat before the television set, engrossed in an old Western movie. Just at a crucial moment in the show, a neighbor boy called the youngster outside. With lightning speed the boy jumped up, turned off the tv set, and dashed outdoors. Seconds later he was back.

"Why did you turn off the movie?" his mother asked.

"Oh," he explained, flicking it back on again, "I didn't want to miss anything!"

—Dan Bennett

Just As Always

The sermon for a teen-aged child
That proves to be most ample
Is still the one that parents preach
By setting an example.

—Hal Chadwick

Strange, isn't it, the way the price of uranium skyrocketed once somebody discovered we could kill people with it?
