De Gaulle's Popularity Hinges On Top Economy

By PHIL NEWSOM
UPI Foreign News Analyst

A large portion of President Charles de Gaulle's continuing popularity among the French people is his undisputed claim that they never had it so good.

French incomes are going up. Economically, the country is developing faster than Germany and more than twice as fast as either the United States or Britain. There is a healthy surplus of exports over imports.

France, once the sick man of Europe, now is the strong man. But there also is a problem which could drastically alter the picture.

The problem is creeping inflation, which has seen the cost of living jump 5.3 per cent in the last year and 17 per cent since De Gaulle devalued the French franc in 1959.

The result is that individual incomes barely have kept pace with increasing prices and in some cases have fallen considerably below them.

Home Front Problem
So long as he had the Algerian war to worry about, De Gaulle was able to remain fairly aloof from the problem and leave it in the hands of his experts.

The French government is the nation's largest single employer and it is the unions in state-owned industries who now are ready to make their bid.

In the state-run coal mines, some 230,000 workers have scheduled a two-day walkout for March 1 and 2. It is possible they will be joined by nearly 500,000 others on the state-run railroads and in the state-run gas and electricity industries.

The De Gaulle government has appealed to private employers to limit wage increases to 4 per cent per year. But France has a labor shortage and the pressure of demand has in some cases forced wages up to more than twice the government ceiling.

This is the prosperity in which the government workers now demand they be allowed to participate.

Butter Over Guns
They are supported by the Communists, who demand that savings resulting from the end of the Algerian war be pumped into wages instead of new armament.

De Gaulle's determination to protect French agriculture was a prominent factor in his veto of British membership in the European Common Market.

Agriculture remains the largest industry in France, but it operates at an efficiency below that of its neighbors. The government is pushing a program of modernization and is attempting to siphon off a sizable portion of farm workers into industry.

Solutions to the problems of labor and agriculture are necessary if the wage-price spiral is not finally to wipe out the economic miracle of France.
