City Council Pushes Enforcement Of Dog Leash Law With More Cash

That part of the canine population which has been running at large in Klamath Falls will be the object of an intensive elimination campaign to start soon by the local poundmaster, it developed last night during a meeting of the city council.

The program formally went into effect before the close of the meeting last night when the council allocated $1,000 from the emergency fund to be used by the poundmaster to employ additional help to pick up stray dogs running loose in the city.

The city council and the poundmaster, targets of disgruntled citizens since the dog leash ordinance went into effect four months ago, have been occasionally reproached because a number of dogs are still at large in the city.

Meanwhile, the council has lauded poundmaster Larry Mueller for the manner in which he has assumed the extra work which developed as the result of the past year of the new ordinance. Mueller is the only employee at the city pound.

The allocation of the emergency funds followed a protest by Robert Stevens, 345 Nevada Avenue, that the leash law was not being enforced, in addition to some later comments by councilmen.

Stevens told the council that several times this month he returned home to find approximately 25 dogs in his yard. Stevens remarked that he summoned the poundmaster several times during the week to come and remove the dogs, but the poundmaster failed to appear.

On one occasion, Stevens said he summoned city police and soon after a police lieutenant and two officers arrived in his home "in a police car and a paddy wagon." The officers counted between 20 and 25 dogs in front of the house and noted the figure in their report, Stevens stated.

Councilman Ladd Hoyt said later that about 3 o'clock one morning he received a telephone call from Stevens protesting the presence of a number of dogs in the vicinity of his home. Councilman Hoyt stated that the next morning he and the poundmaster drove past Stevens' residence and observed no dogs in the area.

"This problem is not unique to Klamath Falls," Hoyt continued. "Every city which has a dog leash law had trouble putting it into effect. It usually takes about six months or a year to get on top of the problem," Hoyt added.

Mayor Robert Veatch then reiterated that the local dog pound is a one-man operation. Under the present system the poundmaster is not able to carry out an extensive dog pickup campaign in addition to his other duties, he said.

Councilman Chet Hamaker then proposed that the council obtain some additional funds from "somewhere" and make an earnest effort to dispose of the problem. The council then decided to set aside the money from the emergency fund so the poundmaster could hire extra employees to remove stray dogs from the city.

If the city council is perplexed with the problem of dogs running loose in the city, it may be faced with a more vexing problem which might develop at the city pound when the dog elimination program goes into effect.

Mrs. Lawrence Mueller, wife of the poundmaster, told the Herald and News early Tuesday that approximately eight or 10 dogs have been picked up daily since the leash law went into effect and as a result the pound is now almost always filled to capacity. She indicated that any step-up in the program to collect stray dogs would probably require the construction of additional pens.

Also present at the hearing was William Dwyer, 442 Michigan Avenue, who protested that left turns would no longer be permitted from Michigan Avenue onto Main Street. Mayor Veatch stated that the change in the traffic pattern resulted from a thorough study by City Manager Bob Kyle, and others, of traffic at that intersection and represents the "best solution available at this time." The traffic study was ordered after two pedestrians were struck by vehicles in that intersection on two successive weekends.

MORE

In other business, the city council: Adopted resolutions for live paving and street improvement projects along Worden Street from Delta to Shelly and Addison Laguna Street from Old Fort Road to Huron Street; South Fifth Street from Oak to Kimlock and Plum streets, and Elm and Kimlock streets from Fifth to Sixth streets; Plum Street and Willow Street from South Seventh Street to Commercial Avenue; Avalon Street from South Sixth Street to Shasta Way. In addition, the council set April 15 as the date it would conduct a public hearing for the latter street project.

The council also adopted resolutions directing that plans be prepared covering the five street improvement projects.

Two public hearings involving the condemnation of as many buildings in the Hot Springs Addition were conducted by the council, and were followed by the first and second readings in each case.

The first building is the property of Viola Buck, 1754 Menlo Way, and is located on Lot One, Block 35 of the Hot Springs Addition, while the other is owned by Sophia Cotton, 433 Michigan Avenue, at Lot Three, Block 53, of the Second Hot Springs Addition.

Mrs. Cotton was represented by her attorney who authorized the council to destroy the condemned building by any method it chose. He stated that his client was not financially able to incur the expense of restoring the structure to meet the city's building code, and further, agreed with city engineers that the building had deteriorated to the point where its restoration was not practical.

Mrs. Buck, owner of the other condemned building, was not present at the hearing.

The council also adopted a resolution authorizing City Manager Bob Kyle to proceed with the preparation of plans and estimating of costs to install an additional storm sewer to serve the Mountain View and Eldorado Heights additions in the vicinity of Tiffany Street.

Approved by the council was the appointment of Rod Bell to the City Planning Commission, the payment of $92,792.27 in bills incurred by the city, and the approval of 10 applications for business licenses. Continued until the next meeting, April 1, was the third and final reading of the ordinance annexing Loma Linda Heights in the city, in addition to the final reading of an ordinance permitting the construction of motels in R-5A zones for conditional use, and the final reading of an ordinance condemning a building located on Lot Four, Block 17, of the Second Railroad Addition.

Noted Singer To Give Concert Here Tonight

The Klamath Community Concert Association will present a noted Chinese-born bass — baritone, Yi-Kwei Sze, in concert tonight at the Mills School Auditorium. Attendance is by membership only.

The artist studied at the National Conservatory of Music in Shanghai and sang with the Shanghai Municipal Opera. At the close of World War II he gave many concerts for American troops and through friends and admirers came in 1947 to the United States. He is now a citizen.

Yi-Kwei Sze has appeared with numerous major symphonies including those of Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, Minneapolis, San Francisco, Cincinnati, Detroit, Pittsburgh, Houston and San Antonio.

Pair Face Theft Count

Wilbur Hickson, 42, and Perry Chocktoot, 30, named on two indictments returned by the Klamath County Grand Jury Friday, were arraigned in Circuit Court No. 2 late Monday afternoon and will enter pleas to the charges, 9 a.m., Thursday, March 21. Chocktoot and Hickson are charged with the larceny of livestock involving the alleged theft of two colts in Beatty last October, in addition to an assault and battery charge which developed last month in connection with the horse larceny.

Also arraigned was J. D. Kness, accused of assault with a dangerous weapon involving the wounding of his estranged wife, Gloria, during a gun shooting at Beatty, Feb. 26. Kness will enter a plea to the charge 10 a.m., Monday, March 25.

The arraignments were originally scheduled to take place in Judge David R. Vandenberg's court at noon, Monday, but other court business caused the judge to transfer the matters to the other circuit court later during the afternoon.

Blinded Store Operator Puzzled By Lye-Tossing

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)—Harry Goldman's first wish is for the return of his sight. His second is to find out who took it away, and why.

Goldman, 48, owns a kosher delicatessen in San Francisco's Fillmore District. Last Wednesday, shortly after 5 p.m., a young Negro came into the store and without warning threw caustic lye into his face. For the past five years, nearly two dozen other persons have been victims of similar attacks in San Francisco.

From his bed in Presbyterian Hospital today, Goldman repeated the question that agonizes him almost as much as the pain: "I can't understand it. Why me?"

The senselessness and apparent lack of motive to the attack puzzle police as well as Goldman. In five days of exhaustive, around-the-clock searching, police inspectors have found only one suspect, and he was quickly cleared.

The added inducement of a $1,000 reward, offered by a San Francisco newspaper, has so far failed to yield additional information.

One Eye Blinded

Doctors say that Goldman has lost the sight of his right eye. They operated on the left eye, but are pessimistic that it can be saved.

Goldman and his clerk, Esther Dumo, were alone in the store when the young man walked in Wednesday. Neither noticed the plastic bottle in his hand.

"He ordered hot dogs and pickles," Goldman recalled. "Then as an afterthought he said, 'Cut me a dollar's worth of pastrami.'"

"I remember seeing him before," he came in with another young man the night before. They acted drunk or doped but maybe they were acting.

"When I finished slicing the pastrami, I turned around and he threw acid in my eyes. He didn't smile, he didn't say a word."

The man then tossed the bottle at Miss Dumo. Her legs were burned.

"It was a vicious crime, vicious, absolutely uncalled for," said Police Chief Thomas Cahill.

Possible Connection
Cahill noted the grim possibility that the recently highly-publicized case of Dr. Geza de Kaplany who killed his wife by pouring nitric acid over her bound body, might have influenced San Francisco's young hoodlums.

Earlier victims were interviewed by police last week to see if they could shed any light on the attack on Goldman, but without success.

Goldman himself was the object of a similar incident only three days before he was blinded. He said another young Negro threw what he thought was bleach at him, burning his face slightly.

"He said something like, 'This is what we think of your pickles,' and then threw it," he told police.

Goldman's family—his wife Miriam, and their son and daughter—share his agonized bewilderment.

"He's a wonderful man," said Mrs. Goldman. "He never had any trouble at the store. We're minority people ourselves."

"He waited on everybody with a smile. Anyone who could do a thing like that—I don't know what to expect next. He never harmed anyone."

Jury Returns Not True Bill On Tule Youth

An 18-year-old rural Tulelake youth who had been charged with the alleged criminal assault of a 15-year-old girl near Merrill on Dec. 20, 1962, was released Friday from the county jail on a motion for District Attorney Dale Crabtree.

The grand jury reviewed the case at its session last week and returned a not true bill.

Oregon State Police apprehended William Lee Guthrie in Malin at 9 p.m. on March 13. Guthrie had been stationed with the Army prior to that time and couldn't be located by state police, according to reports.

On the evening of March 13 state police received information that the youth was back in the state.

Miss Indian America Gives Prayer At Salem

By RUTH KING
SALEM — Ramona Soto, Klamath Falls, Miss Indian America of the Klamath Tribe, gave the impressive Lord's Prayer in Indian sign language before opening of the Tuesday session of the Oregon State Senate in Salem. She was assisted by Sen. Dwight Hotkins of Imbler, who read the prayer in English. She will repeat the performance before the House of Representatives on Wednesday.

The galleries were full as Ramona, dressed in brown buckskin, wearing the traditional single feather of an Indian maiden, stood in the rostrum before President of the Senate Ben Musia. She later was escorted to a seat of honor at the desk of Sen. Harry Boivin.

Her mother, Mrs. Florida Soto, her brother, Elanah Davis, secretary of the remaining tribal members, and his family, Dibbon Cook, secretary of the present tribal council, and his family, and Jesse Kirk, chairman of both groups, were present for her presentation at the Senate.

She later was greeted by Gov. Mark O. Hatfield, who presented her with a map of Oregon plaque and by other dignitaries in his office when a group of Boy Scouts in full tribal dress from the Warm Springs Reservation danced for the governor.

Ramona has been sponsored by the Klamath County legislators and their wives, Sen. and Mrs. Soto.

Raid Siren Bid Okayed

The county court has accepted a bid of $8,485.75 from the Fire Equipment Company, Roseburg, to install four air raid sirens at various points in Klamath Falls. County Civil Defense Director Joe Seales reported Tuesday.

The Roseburg company was among four companies, including three local firms, which entered bids.

Seales said that installation of the sirens is expected sometime within the next 60 days.

The largest of the four air raid sirens, a Model 1,000, 125 decibel unit, will be installed on the roof of the Medical Dental - Dental Building, while three smaller 110 decibel models will be located on telephone poles at Trinity and Lakeview streets, Eberlein and Washburn Way, and Patterson and South Sixth streets.

The control panel for the four-unit system will be operated from the central station at the Klamath Falls Fire Department.

Three other sirens will be installed at a later date and will complete the proposed seven-unit system.

Seales said that 50 per cent of the bid price will be paid from federal government funds while the remaining cost will be financed equally by the state and county.

The unsuccessful bidders were Hahn Electric, $7,689.01; Shaffer Electric Co., $7,741.05, and B&B Radio and Electric, $7,797.80.

Police File Rape Charge

MINERAL WELLS, Tex. (UPI)—Police filed rape charges Monday night against a shaggy-haired, unshaven 26-year-old convicted sex criminal in the attack of a Mineral Wells highway patrolman's daughter.

Sheriff Gilbert Somerfeld arrested Virgil Nelson Halford, 26, of Grand Prairie 45 minutes after the ex-convict abducted and raped the patrolman's 9-year-old daughter.

Halford was the suspect in the kidnapping of four girls, three of whom he abused. Attired in a dirty T-shirt and blue jeans, he surrendered meekly to Somerfeld.

Kidnap charges were filed against him Sunday night in Grand Prairie, where a 17-year-old girl said
